My dining chairs
(oak to the core)
Weren't my style anymore
I'd ordered new ones
Made of chrome
To modernize
My changing home.

I heard a voice say
"Classified"
(Such fine results Can't be denied!)
I sold the oak
And chrome to fit
And now I shine each time I sit.

starters Lisa Vanderburg and Pam England had not been out due to red cards from last weekend's Cal Poly SLO game?

"Yes," said Ghotbi. "We struggled trying to find the right chemistry in the beginning."

Ghotbi's solution was to start Pinnell up front instead of England and put sophomore Lisa Tom in back in place of Vanderburg. Eventually, he moved the versatile Pinnell to midfield and made Riddle a forward, along with Olson.

"To be a good team, you have to be able to solve these problems," he said.

In this match, they proved themselves to be better than just a "good team." In fact, several fans summed it up best, when they walked away uttering a rash of adjectives such as "amazing," and "incredible."

The victory over SDSU brought the Bruins to a 5-0-1 regular season record.

the matches out longer than necessary. One thing the team has proven is its ability to beat the teams it needs to beat. Defending national champion Hawaii, Illinois, Stanford and USC will all attest to that fact.

Against some of the weaker teams, the Bruins have been known not to give their full effort, allowing non-top 20 teams like California and Washington State to take away a game. Although they have yet to lose to a weaker team, this Thursday's match against UC Santa Barbara may hold some surprises for UCLA. Last season, the Gauchos were able to beat the Bruins on their home court, snapping a winning streak that was gaining momentum toward the post season. Santa Barbara has one of the best setters in the West Coast Athletic Conference (formerly the Pacific Coast Athletic Association) in senior Liz Towne. Towne was the star of last season's match-up.

If the Bruins continue their winning ways, they are expected to break the winning streak record set by the 1983 team against Brigham Young University at the Pac-10 Challenge in Pauley Pavilion on the 29th of October.

Irish stun Hurricanes 31-30

By Hershcel Nissenson
AP Football Writer

SOUTH BEND, Ind.— Fourth-ranked Notre Dame got its long-awaited revenge Saturday, defeating No. 1 Miami 31-30 as free safety Pat Terrell, who returned an interception 60 yards for a second-period touchdown, broke up a two-point conversion pass with 45 seconds left.

The game is destined to go down as a college classic and another chapter in Notre Dame's storied football history.

The victory gave Notre Dame a 6-0 record. Miami is 4-1 after suffering its first regular-season setback since a 35-23 loss to Florida on Sept. 7, 1985.

The Irish broke a 21-21 tie when wingback Pat Eilers ran two yards for a tie-breaking third-quarter touchdown, the first of his career, two plays after the Irish turned back a fake punt.

Reggie Ho's 27-yard field goal late in the third period made it 31-21 and Notre Dame survived three Miami scoring threats in the final 7:04. The Irish also overcame a record 424-yard, four-touchdown passing show by Steve Walsh, but negated that by intercepting him three times.

Notre Dame took advantage of seven Miami turnoversu, including two in the waning minutes. The final two, plus the unsuccessful two-point pass, finally signaled an end to the defending national champion Hurricanes' 16-game winning streak and 36-game regular-season skein, the fifth-longest in major-college football history. Miami also had won 20 consecutive road games.

With 3:52 left to play, fullback Cleveland Gary caught a 10-yard pass from Walsh but fumbled at the Notre Dame 1 as he strugled to squirm into the end zone and linebacker Michael Stonebreaker recovered for the Irish.

And with 3:37 remaining, defensive end Frank Stams stripped the ball from Walsh as he cocked his arm to pass and nose guard Chris Zorich recovered.

again the visitors came up empty.

"I told the guys at halftime this is like somebody trying to break into your house, we had the goal but they wanted to take our possessions," noted Schmid.

Anton Nistl ruled the air, punching away several crossballs as the Dons attempted to take advantage of their height. On the ground, Nistl was also equal to the task, blocking a Nick Dimitrievski shot at point blank range with minutes left.

The real difference, though, was the intensity of the Bruins on the hot afternoon. Sweeper Will Steadman's leadership and play on the field earned Schmid's approval.

"Steady was phenomenal in his reads of their offense, he has come to his own in that sweeper position. He can see things on the park that we can't from the bench."

And, coach, what do you see in terms of the future from this win?

"Just like in Poltergeist . . . we're back."

Art and reason

When Mark and I decided to spend the weekend at his mother's house, I never imagined I would be walking into a mouse's nightmare. There were cats everywhere.

Cat plaques, cat statues, cat clocks, even a cat mat. I couldn't begin to duplicate her collection of kitty litter if I spent a year at a garage sale. Conspicuously absent, however, was a real cat. Strange, I thought, and began to fear that a weekend with cat woman could be a lot less than purr-fect.

But then she came home, and Mark introduced her. She was dressed surprisingly well—no leopard pants. In fact, you could say she was the cat's meow, but I'd rather not.

She offered me a cup of Dutch Chocolate Mint. Now that was something I could relate to. Then she brought it out in the most beautiful, distinctly unfeline china I'd ever seen. As we sipped, I found out that Mrs. Campbell has my same weakness for chocolate, loves the theater as much as I do, but, incredibly, never saw "Cats." So Mark and I are taking her next month.

Soccer defeats Aztecs

By Wendy Witherspoon
Staff Writer

The UCLA women's soccer team found sweet revenge Saturday, as it defeated the San Diego State Aztecs in a 4-3 overtime victory.

The revenge that veteran Bruins sought was for last season's controversial 1-0 loss to the Aztecs.

But revenge didn't come so easy. Both coaches admitted that this Bruin-Aztec match-up made for what probably would be the best-played game of the season.

"What can I say? It was an excellent game," said Aztec coach Glen Tourville.

UCLA coach Afshin Ghotbi went even further: "It was one of the best wins of my career.

"Every time we put one in, they put one in," he said.

After a slow start, the Aztecs scored the first goal, when SDSU's Christine Hicks broke past UCLA defender Caroline Lee and got a shot past keeper Donna Morris.

An unhappy Morris did not appreciate having her perfect record marred, but there would soon be other things to worry about. Morris would be pressed to make 13 saves throughout the game.

After the SDSU goal, the Bruins quickly mounted an attack which led to midfielder Sondra Shatkins' first goal of the day. At the 31-minute mark, Shatkins crossed the ball from the right side of the field, and it was recieved on a header by forward Susan Riddle. Riddle knocked the ball into a SDSU defender, who in turn knocked it into the goal.

Tensions were high as the players left the field at halftime with a tied score of 1-1.

Tensions climbed even higher, though, as neither side came back to score in the second half for almost 30 minutes. Then SDSU forward Holly Ham put one away, and tension turned to panic as the minutes ticked by.

This panic would, fortunately, not affect Bruin forward Britt Olson, who, with three minutes left in the game, calmly received a header from Riddle and booted it into the net, ending regulation play in a 2-2 tie.

"A gift from God!" said Ghotbi on the sideline as an ecstatic Bruin team expressed its joy.

It was in the ensuing 20-minute overtime that the Bruins would get down to real business by starting and finishing the scoring action. At the 95-minute mark, sophomore Kirsten Pinnell tallied one up for the Bruins, bringing the score to 3-2.

As predicated, in this back and forth match, it was the Aztecs' turn now. SDSU's Brooks Hollman made what would be the final Aztec goal of the game, tying the score at 3-3.

In what was called a sensational game, disappointment would have followed if Shatkins hadn't provided an exciting ending. But with three minutes left in overtime, she did.

"All I saw was the ball up in the air and no one was there, so I headed it in," she said.

And this freshman sensation led her team to a 4-3 victory.

But would the game have turned out differently if regular

Donahue said. "But we thought we saw some things that Cal might do that we could exploit."

"(The receivers) did an outstanding job," Aikman said. "We exploited some weaknesses of Cal. It's not like we called any different routes today. They just let us have some."

The Bears made it close shortly thereafter, as Cal quarterback Troy Taylor, who himself had quite an impressive day, tossed a three-yard touchdown to Darryl Ingram with 9:16 left in the half. Taylor finished the day 21 of 34 for 248 yards.

But the Bruins bounced right back with a 60-yard drive to close the half, capped by Aikman's one-yard plunge with 16 seconds left to make the score 24-10 and leave the Cal coaching staff wondering what it would take to stop this Bear-eating quarterback from swallowing Berkeley whole.

And, obviously, halftime didn't provide the answer.

In UCLA's first possession of the second half, the Bruins pieced together a 90-yard drive in which Aikman completed four of six passes for 52 yards and contributed that aforementioned 11-yard scramble to keep the drive alive.

And, with 8:23 left in the third quarter, it was UCLA 31, Cal 10; Notre Dame 31, Miami 30.

Yes, at that magical point midway through the third quarter, the word from Notre Dame's lair in South Bend, Indiana reached Berkeley, California, and the roar from the UCLA cheering section was followed by a "We're number one!" chant—a chant never before truthfully spoken during the Donahue era.

From that point on, attention paid to the game at hand was never quite as intense—not from the 58,000 in the stands or the Bruin players, who had handily disposed of California as they have every year since 1971.

And when sophomore tailback Brian Brown, seeing his first action of the year since returning from a hamstring injury, scampered into the end zone from 11 yards out to make the score 38-13 with 3:17 left in the third quarter, there was a steady stream of humans to the exit.

Cal scored late to make the score 38-21 and, after subsequently recovering an onside kick, drove down to the UCLA one-yard line in a threat to make the score quite respectable.

But the UCLA defense rose for its first goal line test of the year and stuffed a fourth-and-one try by fullback Todd Powers to account for the final score.

"I think it was our best defensive game of the year," said nose guard Jim Wahler. "We played consistently and had a goal-line stand. That shows me some character. If you have character, you know your guys will come through in the clutch."

The facts lend credence to Wahler. The Bruins reached Taylor for a season-high seven sacks. And this coming just days after Donahue expressed worry over UCLA's ability to put heat on the opposing quarterback. Seniors Chance Johnson and Carnell Lake and sophomore Bryan Wilcox each had one and a half sacks to lead the assault.

But to Donahue, it all goes back to his quarterback.

"Today, the game could have been quite different had Troy not played so well," he said. "Normally, we wait until Monday to give out our game balls, but he got today's as soon as we got into the locker room. There was no vote.

"Troy was nothing short of spectacular."

Donahue's Bruins are off to their best start since 1982, when they also went 6-0 and were ranked No. 2 before losing at Arizona and eventually finishing 9-2.

So where do the Bruins play next week in hopes of going 7-0 for the first time ever under Donahue?

Take a wild guess.

Bruin Notes: The return of Brian Brown was a succesful one, as Brown showed the quickness and toughness that he flashed as a freshman. Brown carried five times for 31 yards and a touchdown and also caught four passes for 30 yards. . . .The UCLA offensive line gave Aikman plenty of time to throw the ball and did not yield a sack. "The line did an outstanding job," Aikman said. "Our passing game is a real group effort.". . .Next week should herald the return of All-American tight end Charles Arbuckle, who said, "I'm not gonna let them go to the desert without me.". . .Marcus Turner had another interception, the 13th of his UCLA career, tying him for fourth with Craig Rutledge, Lupe Sanchez and Bill Stits.

Marcelo Carsalade grimaces in pain after the loss to Cal Saturday.

UCLA's top scorer, Peterson, who tallied after an assist by Rousseau to put the Bruins up 6-3 at 6:06 of the fourth. Stanford hung tough as Greg Lewis scored during a power play to keep it close, 6-4.

But the crucial blow was to come only 17 seconds later. With a Cardinal player all over him, Peterson hammered the ball into the Stanford goal to give UCLA a 7-4 lead with 5:09 to play.

The defense then went back to work, shutting out Stanford for four minutes to preserve the victory. Sophomore Javier Escobar scored during a rare Bruin power play—the game was fairly free of major penalties—to give UCLA a four-goal lead with 2:24 to play. The Cardinal tallied late to keep things respectable, as the Bruins accomplished the first half of their task, winning, 8-5.

After the game, UCLA head coach Bob Horn explained that he is trying new combinations of players and strategies in order to keep his team from getting into a rut.

"We were getting too predictable," said Horn, who added that it would take "a great defensive effort" to defeat Cal (whose players were in attendance at the match) in the game the following day.

A packed house of over 1,000 greeted the Bruins Saturday morning, as they faced the powerful Bears in what may be a preview of the NCAA Championship match. As expected, defense was the name of the game, as, after one quarter of play, the score was tied at one. Rousseau had the lone Bruin goal.

The second period was marked by quick changes of possession and spirited defense on both sides. Peterson put UCLA ahead at 5:43 of the second, but two Cal goals by Rich Ambidge put the Bears up 3-2 at the half.

Both squads came out fired up for the second half, but the Bruins drew first blood on a goal by Peterson after a Carsalade steal. Cal came right back with a penalty shot goal by Kirk Everist to make it 4-3, Bears.

UCLA knotted the score at four on Peterson's third goal during a Bruin power play. But, once again, Cal forged ahead on a goal by Chris Humbert with 1:29 in the period.

In the closing seconds of the third quarter, Carsalade successfully got two Cal players ejected on penalties, but UCLA could not take advantage, after it was unable to control the opening sprint of the fourth quarter.

Neither team was able to break through in the final frame, until Cal's Everist scored during a Bear power play to make it 6-4. But the Bruins were not finished, as they scored the next two goals—one coming from senior Jeff Moore and the other on an eight-meter shot by Rousseau to tie it at six with 1:13 left.

Each side had an opportunity to end it, but neither could, as the match went into overtime.

In the first overtime period, Cal tallied twice, while the Bruins were unable to counter. With the score 8-6, Bears, in the second overtime period, UCLA mounted its final threat, as Moore scored to bring the Bruins to within one, 8-7.

But the victory was not to be, as Cal stopped the final UCLA attack.

The closely contested match with many questionable calls will surely be a sign of things to come, as the two teams will meet again at UCLA and likely again at the NCAA championship game in November.

point in the season, it's not a true indicator.

"I have long said that the polls in the fifth and sixth weeks of the season aren't where you start to judge things," Donahue said. "It isn't until the 9th or 10th week that the dust starts to settle. Hey, if we're No. 1, I'll be happy. It'll be the first time under my tenure that we're No. 1. But at this stage, it's not critical, and I'm not going to worry about it."

All right then, coach, what can you judge right now?

"I'll tell you this," he said. "I think Troy Aikman is the No. 1 quarterback in America. Today, Troy was brilliant. Absolutely brilliant."

And it's hard to argue with Donahue there. Aikman unleashed an offensive blitzkrieg that stunned the Bears from the outset and posted some serious numbers for the nation's Heisman voters to gawk at.

Consider: he completed 21 of 32 passes for a 66 percent completion rate; threw for 322 yards, just six yards shy of his career-best; and he completed two touchdown passes, while throwing no interceptions.

And that was just in the air.

On the ground, an area usually reserved for a quarterback across town, Aikman showed he was fleet of foot, too, scurrying for 33 yards and a touchdown. And among his six carries was a nifty 11-yarder on a third-and-ten that kept a Bruin drive alive—a drive that ended two plays later in a touchdown.

"I feel like I can run adequately," Aikman said. "When they drop a lot of people into coverage and give me the run, I'll take it.

"You know, I had a little experience running the ball over at Oklahoma," he laughed.

But it was Aikman's arm that earned him spots on Saturday night highlight films. After a 35-yard Alfredo Velasco field goal opened the day's scoring, Aikman dropped back on the Bruins' next possession and let loose with a towering spiral to wide receiver Paul Richardson, who would have been mistaken for a stray fan streaking across the field were he any more wide open.

The ball landed softly in Richardson's mitts for a 52-yard touchdown, and the Bruins led, 10-0, with 5:24 left in the first quarter.

After Cal countered with a field goal to make it 10-3, Aikman took to the sky again. This time he rolled to his right and fired a line-drive from Cal's 40-yard line to Reggie Moore, whose inside cut left his man behind.

Moore took the ball straight in the solarplexus and walked in for a 40-yard touchdown, to make it 17-3 with 13:42 left in the second quarter.

So, just minutes into the second quarter, Aikman had already gone deep for two touchdowns, dispelling the ever-increasing notion that the Bruins were a team that was allergic to the deep pass.

"Coming in, we realized that we haven't gone deep,"

Volleyball rolls along, goes 16-0

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

Sportsmanship can be defined as a team facing a difficult challenge and giving a solid effort.This is the story of the Washington State University Cougars and the University of Washington Huskies this past weekend. Their respective women's volleyball teams took on their most difficult task of the season, the No. 1 ranked UCLA Bruins, but came up short.

The Bruins easily defeated their Pac-10 rivals, raising their Pac-10 record to 9-0 and their overall record to 16-0. The current winning streak is the longest since the 20-0 start by the Bruins in 1983. The attendance over the weekend may also have been record-setting. The crowd of 3,384 that came to watch the Bruins over the two-match span was the biggest ever for UCLA volleyball.

The Cougars were the victims Friday night, losing in four games, 15-6, 15-9, 8-15 and 15-9. Junior middle blocker Daiva Tomkus, a first team All-America from last season, led the Bruins to victory, scoring 17 kills for a .419 hitting percentage. Tomkus is the hottest attacker in the Pac-10. In all but one of her past 14 matches, she has hit at least .364. Even more, she has three matches this season without recording any hitting errors. Tomkus is also the biggest Bruin force at the net defensively, scoring four of the Bruins 11 team blocks against Washington State. Her five service aces put her one short of her personal best, as she pursues the season record for aces held by Olympic gold medalist Liz Masakayan.

It was the strength of the Bruin block that crushed the Cougars, who had only two attackers hit over .300. As a team, the Cougars hit only .188. For UCLA opponents this year, the .188 percentage is rather high. Only three teams—Illinois, Oregon and USC—have been able to hit over .200 against UCLA.

The 13th-ranked Huskies fared even worse than their cross-state rivals, falling in three quick games, 15-11, 15-7 and 15-7. It was Tomkus again who led the team, scoring 17 kills for a .536 hitting percentage and recording half of the Bruins' seven team blocks. No Husky attacker was able to even approach .300 in hitting percentage.

A big side note for the Bruins this weekend was the return of 6-4 middle blocker Rachel Norris. Although she played in only two of the six games over the weekend and tallied only one attack attempt, her return is a big step toward her eventual recovery from the dislocated knee that she suffered during spring training. It is clear that she is not confident with her ability at the moment, judging from her tentativeness on the court. However, her continued recovery may boost the already-powerful Bruin threat at the net.

Norris was supposed to step in for 6-3 graduated senior Stacy Buck at middle blocker. Buck, a strong blocking and hitting force at the net, was replaced in the back row by specialist Julie Barnes, who also graduated. Norris and junior back-row specialist Hillary Malloy were supposed to play in a similar fashion.

Norris' eventual return will make the Bruin blocking game (called the best in the country by players from Arizona State) even stronger. At 6-4, Norris is the tallest Bruin woman volleyballer ever. The current Bruin middle blocker, Elaine Youngs (who plays opposite Tomkus), will probably move to the outside, the role she played in high school.

According to Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski, the team has progressed even farther than he had expected at the beginning of the season. However, he was critical about the lack of steadiness and aggression against some of the team's weaker opponents. Against both Washington schools, the Bruins were unable to shut down either team quickly. Continual side outs and service errors dragged Mike Farr climbed the ladder to bring down this first-down pass from Troy Aikman. Now the question: will Farr, Aikman and the Bruins be No. 1 in the nation this week?

No. 1: Who is it?

yards and two touchdowns on 21 of 32 passing. Aikman also rushed for 30 more yards and another touchdown.

A performance like that surely will raise Heisman voters' eyebrows and should be enough to push the Bruins into the top spot.

But do Aikman and his teamates think they're No. 1?

While the players seemed happy with their newfound fortunes, the mood after the game was, if anything, subdued. Many of them didn't even know of the Notre Dame victory until after the game was over. (Many players, though, had gotten the word after the UCLA crowd began cheering and chanting after they had got the word on Miami.)

When asked if they were the No. 1 team, the responses from coaches and players alike were, for the most part, low-key.

Terry Donahue, still soaked from his traditional soda shower that he receives after each Bruin victory, said, "I'll think it will be exciting (if we are No. 1). You coach for thirteen years, and to have a team to be No. 1 would be a real nice thing.

"We have taken several teams' best shots this year, but at this stage, the rankings aren't that critical, and I'm not going to worry it."

"I don't know, I haven't seen the polls," said Aikman with a laugh when asked about the team's chances to move up. "Whether we're No. 1 or No. 2 doesn't matter. We've still got to play Saturdays. A bowl usually decides all that anyway.

"I've always said that if we go 12-0 and we're not national champions, then that's the breaks."

Quarterback coach Rick Neuheisel wasn't so sure of the team's status, either.

"All I know is that we are 6-0. I don't know if we'll move up or what," he said.

Chances are, with the Bruins' impressive victory—although a late Cal score made it look a little more respectable than it was—and the Irish's close win at home, the Bruins will get the nod from the AP (writers) and UPI (coaches) voters.

Most players in the locker room were, to be sure, enthusiastic about the news that they had the possibility of being the top-ranked team in the country, although the players were all taking it in stride.

Reggie Moore, who had another outstanding day, hauling in six passes for 122 yards and a touchdown, wasn't sure if the Bruins would move up or be leapfrogged by the Irish.

"I don't know, I guess it all depends on the voters," Moore said. "It would be nice, though."

Moore suggested, as did many of the players, that No. 1 or No. 2, the Bruins still had a long way to go to accomplish their goal of reaching and winning the Rose Bowl.

"You know, everybody's gunning for you when you're No. 2 or No. 1. That's how it is being No. 1 or No. 2. I don't really think it makes much difference. Everybody shoots for you."

Defensive lineman Mike Lodish also expressed the same attitude about being No. 1.

"Hey, you've got to go week by week. We haven't seen the polls, they don't come out until later this week, so we don't know where we are. We don't want to get cocky, we know that we have to give it our best every time out," he said.

Jim Wahler, the defensive tackle who returned after a suspension that kept him out of the Oregos State game, was happy with the outcome of the game and seemed certain that the No. 1 ranking belonged to him and his teammates.

"We don't have control over the press, but if they know what's going on, then we'll be No. 1," he said.

But does Wahler want No. 1 status only halfway through the season?

"Hell, yes," he said. "It's a battle to get there, and it's even harder to stay there."

By today at 3 p.m., the Bruins will know if they or Notre Dame have seized the top spot. But it doesn't really matter to the Bruins. They know that the road to the Roses is still a long and deangerous one.

As linebacker Doug Kline said, "We'll all know on who's No. 1 on January 2."

Women harriers beat colds and competition at CaPSLO

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

Bruin harrier Pam Thompson and Nebraska runner Tracy Smith charged into the final 500 meters of the Cal Poly San Luis Obispo Mustang Invitational Saturday running stride for stride. They didn't know it at the time, but the winner of their individual challenge would also lead her team to victory.

As they neared the finish line, Thompson surged ahead and crossed over in 18:32, just one second ahead of Smith. Although Thompson was the 31st runner to finish, that one second spelled a team win for UCLA.

The unranked Bruins scored 93 points to 18th-ranked Nebraska's 94. Ninth-rated Cal was third (106), Cal Poly SLO was fourth (142) and highly regarded Kansas State was fifth (149) out of 15 teams. UCLA's "B" team was 11th.

For the UCLA varsity, this race was something of a turning point. "I do believe we are a legitimate top ten team," head coach Bob Messina said. "Despite not being really healthy or running really well, we won."

The common cold, indeed, was the one of biggest obstacles the Bruins had to overcome Saturday. Three of UCLA's top runners , Thompson, Debbie Williams and Laurie Chapman, were under the weather.

Laurie Chapman, however, "ran a phenomenal race" according to Messina. Despite her cold, the sophomore from San Jose finished sixth overall (15:47) and first for UCLA.

Chapman has been leading the Bruins for most of the season, but two of Saturday's surprises came from freshmen Kristi Bache and Laura Ashe. Apparently, they forgot how inexperienced they were in collegiate competition, as they crossed the line in 23rd (18:22) and 24th (18:22), respectively. More importantly, they were the third and fourth Bruins to finish.

While Thompson and Williams were tripped up by their colds, it was Melissa Sutton who sprinted into the second varsity spot. After a somewhat inconsistent early season, Sutton came on Saturday to complete the course in ninth place (18:22). "She was very aggressive, really tough," Messina said.

Dani and Ortiz pace the Bruins at Cal Poly

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

Even without two of its top five runners, the UCLA men's cross country team finished a strong sixth Saturday at the Cal Poly San Luis Obispo Mustang Invitational.

Moreover, two of the obviously healthy Bruins shone. Mark Dani paced the blue and gold with a fourth-place showing, completing the 8000 meters in 24:41. Just behind him was Bruin Jim Ortiz, who finished fifth (24:45).

"The positive thing is, without two of our top five athletes, still running well as a team," said head coach Bob Larsen. ". . .The real positive thing is Mark Dani getting fourth and Jim Ortiz fifth."

As a team, UCLA finished sixth in the 13-squad race behind some of the best teams in the country. The Reebok Auggies, a club team, won the Invitational with 83 points. Midwestern powers 10th-ranked Nebraska and Kansas State were second and third, respectively. Then came Fresno State, Cal Poly SLO, UCLA and the Running Experience club with 106 points. The Bruins garnered sixth because of a faster fifth-place runner.

Additionally, the undermanned Bruins proved themsevles better than two Southland rivals. UC Irvine placed eighth behind UCLA, while arch-rival USC came in ninth.

Larsen was encouraged by the fact that the Bruins finished respectably even without the services of Victor Santamaria and Richard Erbes. Santamaria, UCLA's number one runner last season, was sidelined with quadriceps cramps. Erbes, the Bruins' second finisher at the prestigious Stanford Invitational Oct. 1, was out with a hip injury.

Fortunately for the harriers, Dani and Ortiz, the second and third collegiate finishers, respectively, were able to pick up the slack. Dani, a transfer from Larsen's former Grossmont College program, stayed on a pace to log the best season of any Bruin. Dani again showed fine form Saturday, after finishing second overall—and first for UCLA—at his two previous meets.

Ortiz's performance may have been even more impressive, considering he was coming off of respiratory problems at the Stanford meet. Ortiz ran with Dani through most of the race, then dropped off to place fifth overall. "It was one of Jim's best races ever," lauded Larsen.

The performances of Dani and Ortiz are also highlighted by the fact that the rest of the Bruin varsity left something to be desired. In simpler terms, Dani and Ortiz somewaht carried the Bruins.

Beat Ammann crossed the line 40th (25:44), Christian Cushing-Murray was 50th (25:53) and Joe Nitti, still recovering from tendonitits, placed 56th (25:56).

The next three Bruin finishers were Jeff Korn (67th), Jeff Wood (75th) and Sean Noonan (84th).

Looming on the horizon for UCLA's harriers are the Pac-10 Championships, set for Oct. 31. Larsen realizes that the Bruins will have to be 100 percent to run with the stiff competition there—and possibly in the NCAA Championships.

"We obviously need (Santamaria and Erbes) back to challenge some of the better teams," Larsen said. "We could challenge a Nebraska with a completely healthy team.

"We have two weeks to hopefully get those guys to go," he continued. "I'm optimistic at this point."

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Jim Ortiz finished fifth in the 8000m this weekend in San Luis Obispo.

Bruins leave Berkeley thinking No. 1

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

BERKELEY—Did anybody remember that there was a football game played here Saturday?

Oh, sure, it was a somewhat forgettable one between UCLA and California. A methodical little thing in which the Bruins basically undressed the Bears for the 17th straight year, the 1988 version being 38-21, UCLA.

And, yes, it was another weekend afternoon for Bruin quarterback Troy Aikman to flex his Heisman Trophy candidate muscles. Which he did, quite impressively, thank you.

But all that was pretty much lost in the shuffle surrounding a certain score from a certain game involving a certain team from Florida that holds a certain spot right ahead of the No. 2-ranked Bruins—(now 6-0, 3-0 in Pac-10).

For those of you on the slow side, figure it out: No. 1-ranked Miami (Fla.) lost to No. 4-ranked Notre Dame on Saturday, 31-30, thus vacating the spot at the top of the national rankings and vaulting UCLA to. . . .

Stop right there.

Head coach Terry Donahue would like it that way. Not that Donahue doesn't want to be the No. 1 team in the nation. It's just that he thinks that, at this

With Miami gone, who's No. 1?

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

BERKELEY—Top-ranked Miami's Steve Walsh took the snap and looked to his right. The Hurricanes were down, 31-30, to No. 4 Notre Dame and going for a two-point conversion with 45 seconds left to play. Walsh dropped back, shuffled, rolled right and let fly with a pass to the corner of the end zone. Notre Dame safety Pat Terrell, playing tight on Miami receiver Leonard Conley, went up and knocked the pass away, the ball falling harmlessly to the South Bend turf.

With that, about 59,000 Fighting Irish fans poured onto the field, screaming, "We're number one."

Hundreds of miles west, however, a couple thousand blue and gold clad rooters begged to differ, taunting the denizens of Berkeley, California with their own chants of "We're number one," as the No. 2 UCLA Bruins pounded the California Golden Bears, 38-21.

And so, with Heisman hopeful Troy Aikman leading the way, UCLA looks poised to move into the No. 1 spot vacated by the vaunted Hurricanes.

Aikman, who in the words of coach Terry Donahue was "absolutely brilliant," threw for 322

Soccer streaks to 1-0 win

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

In defeating the University of San Francisco Dons 1-0 Sunday afternoon, the UCLA men's soccer squad kept more than just its playoff hopes alive.

Several streaks of distinction were maintained, including a fourth consecutive shutout win, as the Bruins used overall team speed to outpace the larger and more physical Dons.

The speed was showcased on the only goal, which came at 8:43 from Bill Thompson on a through pass from Ray Fernandez to keep two personal streaks alive as well. Thompson has now scored in five consecutive games, and Fernandez has assisted on a Thompson goal in four straight.

"I can find Billy all the time, wherever on the field he is," explained Fernandez. "As long as he makes the runs, I can give him the ball."

That's exactly what happened, as Thompson outran Olympic-team defender John Doyle of USF and punched the ball home. It seems that the UCLA offense has gelled in the last few games, relying upon those through balls for the scoring threats, right Coach Sigi Schmid?

"We feel that when we get the ball to our forwards' feet they can be dangerous — they might have had the ball more (in terms of possession) but we had as many if not more chances to score."

UCLA's defense just said no once again, in its stiffest test of quite some time. Especially in the second half, the Dons were able to muscle the ball upfield, but time and time

Water polo earns split in Bay Area

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

BERKELEY— The UCLA men's water polo team traveled north this weekend to battle the two most dominant teams in water polo over the last five years, Cal and Stanford. In recent history, the two Bay Area schools have made a habit of winning the NCAA title.

Meanwhile, the No. 1-ranked Bruins tried to take another step towards breaking that hold on the national championship.

UCLA defeated No. 4-ranked Stanford, the 1986 champ, on Friday, 8-5, but could not come back on Saturday to beat No. 2 Cal, the defending titleholder, as the Bears won, 8-7, in double overtime.

On Friday, in front of a large crowd at Stanford's DeGuerre Pool, the Bruins had a tough time getting started against the Cardinal. They found themselves down, 2-0, after the first quarter.

While the Bruins are a team used to a little more scoring this year, they did not panic. Rather, they got the ball in the hands of their two scoring leaders, senior Hank Peterson and junior Alex Rousseau.

UCLA came out quickly in the second period, as senior Fernando Carsalade put in the first Bruin goal after 31 seconds had ticked off the clock. Soon afterward, Rousseau went to work.

Actually, Rousseau didn't just go to work, he dominated the game.

The junior put in his first of four straight goals at 5:11 of the second quarter on an assist by senior Jeff Moore to tie the match at 2-2. Just over two minutes later, Rousseau scored out of the hole to give UCLA the lead, which it was not to relinquish. He added his third goal of the quarter with only nine seconds remaining to put the Bruins up, 4-2, at the half.

Credit must also be given to the UCLA defense, which shut out the powerful Cardinal for all of the second and most of the third quarter.

The offense slowed down in the third quarter, but not before Rousseau put in his fourth goal, making it 5-2, Bruins. Stanford's Andrew Lawson kept the Cardinal in the game by scoring with 2:20 left. Thus the third quarter ended with the score at 5-3.

In the fourth, Rousseau handed the scoring duties over to

AP, UPI agree—UCLA is the nation's best

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

Well, it's official.

UCLA football is currently king of the hill. Top of the heap. A-Number One.

The Associated Press and United Press International polls have voted Terry Donahue's Bruins the No. 1 team in the nation. The last time UCLA was ranked No. 1 was in 1967, the same year quarterback Gary Beban won the Heisman Trophy.

How ironic it is then that, 21 years later, quarterback Troy Aikman, the nation's leading Heisman candidate, has led the Bruins to this lofty perch.

UCLA grabbed 33 of 60 first place votes in the AP poll, while Notre Dame, which knocked off previously top-ranked Miami 31-30 Saturday, got 22 first place votes. No. 3 Southern Cal received 5 first place votes. The Hurricanes dropped to No. 4.

The AP Top Ten was rounded out by Nebraska, West Virginia, Florida State, Oklahoma, Clemson, and Auburn.

The UPI coaches poll gave UCLA 37 of 50 first place votes, the Irish 10 votes and the Trojans 2 votes. One vote was unaccounted for. The UPI poll was identical to the AP poll except that West Virginia was fifth, Nebraska sixth.

The Bruins are also ranked No. 1 by USA Today/CNN, The Sporting News and Football News.

Donahue received the news at approximately 3:30 p.m. Monday afternoon. The 13th year head coach was sitting in his office, chatting with the Daily Bruin when a roar went through the athletic department offices, letting him know that his 6-0 Bruins had been recognized as the nation's top team.

"We are all very excited to be No. 1," said Donahue, with a grin.

"Twenty one years of coaching and I've never been on a team that was number one," he said. "I've never played on a team that was number one, so from that standpoint it's very exciting."

However, Donahue slipped back into his usual cautious self, saying, "But the reality of things is, we have to go and play Arizona in Tucson Saturday."

That view has been shared by most of Donahue's players as well, who possess a cautious optimism about being the top-ranked team in America.

Aikman, whose spectacular aerial assaults are a big reason the Bruins are so highly regarded, welcomed the challenge of being No. 1 but also felt it didn't change anything.

"Being No. 1 is nice, but I don't really think there is too much of a difference in being the No. 2 team," he said. "I think if you're in the top five, then everybody gets up for you and wants to knock you off. We still have to go out and play football on Saturdays.

"I think it will create a lot of excitement for the students and the fans, and give them a sense of pride. The fans should be proud. I think people here are going to be excited. It's good for L.A., the fans and the program."

The ranking should also give Aikman's Heisman chances another big boost.

And while being No. 1 certainly is exciting and has its advantages—both the Arizona and the Washington State game will be televised by ABC—it also had its disadvantages, as Donahue-

BSA not present at retreat

Event sponsor questions group's sincerity

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

The absence of the Black Student Alliance from a special interest group retreat has caused a student government leader to question the group's sincerity toward its proposed changes in the SIG definition.

Although 10 of the 12 SIGs attended the Oct. 9 retreat, representatives from the Black Student Alliance and the Gay and Lesbian Association did not show.

Questioning BSA's sincerity was Michael Braun, Undergraduate Students Association second vice president, who sponsored the event.

During an Oct. 2 USAC meeting, BSA Vice-chair Ryan Whetstone said he would attend the retreat to discuss BSA's proposed Underrepresented Student Organization (USO) document.

BSA intends to replace the current USAC Special Interest Group definition with the USO definition of SIG.

According to Braun, Whetstone sent a memo two days after the retreat, on the back of a "scrap of paper." The memo stated that because of "car trouble," Whetstone could not attend the retreat.

Braun sent a letter to Whetstone on Oct. 14 expressing his "dismay" that BSA had not attended the retreat. In the letter, he said that Whetstone and BSA had missed "an invaluable opportunity to talk with the people whom your document most effects."

"Your insincerity at the council table only adds to my disappointment," Braun's letter

Chancellor to attend USAC meeting tonight

By Holly Bauer
and Richard Hopkins
Staff Writers

As what Administrative Representative Lyle Timmerman called a way of "letting him know what's on the student's minds," Chancellor Charles Young plans to attend tonight's Undergraduate Students Association Council meeting.

Some USAC members have already planned questions to ask Young.

Ken Wada, cultural affairs commissioner, will question the chancellor about diversity in the faculty tenure process, particularly in the case of Don Nakanishi, assistant professor in the Graduate School of Education.

Nakanishi claimed he was not given tenure because of his research in minority issues.

Florie Aranovich, academic affairs commissioner, plans to ask Young if UCLA is going to take any concrete steps in "alleviating racial and gender tensions that were addressed and brought to light at the Senator Torres (Oct. 4) hearing on racism."

Second Vice President Mike Braun will ask Young about how the second vice president's office should interact with special interest groups (SIGs), and what the chancellor thinks the definition of an SIG should be.

Timmerman said that Young usually tries to attend USAC meetings once per quarter depending on his schedule. He normally has no set agenda to speak on.

When asked if he could foresee any issues surfacing, Timmerman said that faculty diversity and the Torres racism hearing may be discussed.

At press time, Young could not be reached for comment.

The meeting is scheduled to be held at 7 p.m. in Kerckhoff 400.

UC lobbyers discuss vital student issues

The University of California Student Association (UCSA) will focus its lobbying efforts on six student-related issues this academic year, the association's board of directors decided Sunday at a meeting at UCLA.

Student health insurance and graduate employment were named the "major" issues on the association's advocacy agenda. Campus facilities will be a "moderate" issue, and graduate affirmative action, the quality of undergraduate education and California Senate Bill 195 regarding student fee policy will receive "minor" attention from UCSA.

UCSA, composed of undergraduate and graduate governments from the nine UC campuses, lobbies on behalf of students before the governor, state legislature and the UC administration. Representatives from each campus comprise a Board of Directors, the association's governing body.

The directors placed an issue into a major, moderate or minor category to reflect the amount of time and effort UCSA will put in to pursue it.

The full advocacy agenda was approved 15-0-1.

Although abstaining from the vote, Bruce Cowan, UCLA's undergraduate representative to the association, said the agenda is an "excellent" one, which is "exactly what UCLA students need." Cowan declined to explain his abstention.

Noted scholar speaks at UCLA on TV, movie portrayals of disabled

By Thanh Nhan
Contributor

A noted scholar in the field of disabilities spoke at UCLA last week about the portrayal of disabled persons in motion pictures and television.

Dr. Paul Longmore, a fellow of the Huntington Library, gave his presentation as a part of Disabilities Awareness Month.

Identifying disability with evil is the media's oldest image, according to Longmore. Citing "Richard III" as an example, Longmore said, "the disabled are the villains. The villainy is linked to the disability; a character is evil because he is disabled." This still persists in motion pictures and television today, he said.

For example, Dr. Miguel Loveless, the infamous dwarf on the long running series "The Wild Wild West," is portrayed as an obsessed man. Dr. Loveless dreams of conquering the world in order to avenge his disability.

Longmore claims that stories which link evil with disability reflect the social values of the times. The images portray disabled persons as having a "loss of social and moral control," and being "less fully human" than able persons. In addition, Longmore said that the media portray disabled persons as dangerous people who should be separated and "ultimately put to death."

Movies like "Halloween," "Nightmare on Elm Street" and "Friday the 13th" portray disfigured persons that keep coming back to life. Longmore said, "It's the evil that will not die, it's the disfigurement that will not die."

Many movies portray the disabled as helpless victims. Movies like "Wait Until Dark" convey to the audience that the disabled are helpless, always in jeopardy and less human. "It

Anti-drilling initiative focus of rally

By Cameron Shaw, Contributor

Lt. Governor Leo McCarthy and Congressman Mel Levine joined a rally at Will Rogers State Beach Sunday in support of Proposition O, an initiative to ban coastal oil drilling.

If passed, Proposition O would stop Occidental Petroleum, the same company responsible for an oil spill "disaster" in the North Sea, from erecting a permanent 15-story derrick and 60 production wells along Pacific Coast Highway, right next to the beach, said Levine.

"By passing this bill we will send a message to Washington that it's not OK to drill on or off the California coast," Levine said.

Representatives of Occidental Petroleum were unavailable for comment at press time.

"Building here is far too dangerous," said State Controller Greg Davis. "Occidental wants to build at the base of the notoriously slideprone Palisades bluffs, very close to the Newport-Inglewood earthquake fault." Many experts agree that the area is both seismically and geologically unsafe, according to Pete Saunders, a Sierra Club spokesman.

"Proposition O," said Saunders, "transcends partisan politics. It is a purely environmental issue supported by both parties. If proposition O fails, the city and the environment will take the risk, not just the liberals or conservatives."

"To millions of people these beaches are their only contact with nature," said Leo McCarthy, "but to Occidental, profit is what matters."

To combat the efforts of conservationists, Occidental has added Proposition P to the ballot, a bill which "gives Occidental Petroleum the legal right to begin drilling immediately," said Saunders.

Proposition P, according to Levine, is just "another part of Oxy's campaign of distortion and deception."

Conservationists believe that Oxy's media campaign represents the way the twenty year environmental battle has been fought, said Roger Diamond, president of the conservationist group No Oil. Occidental is trying to "strong arm" those opposed to the measure with its wealth and political influence, he added.

"Our battle against Oxy," said Davis "has been a 'David and Goliath' struggle. We have been massively outspent by unlimited funds."

"Proposition P is a shame" said Los Angeles Councilman Zev Yaroslavsky, "and voters must not be fooled."

"Proposition P is the first time a private company has tried to use an initiative for its personal gain" said Levine.

In his speech, McCarthy urged voters to "vote yes on O, for Oceans, and no on P, against pollution and phony promises."

Recent coup attempt foiled, says Haitian military government

By Michael Norton
Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The military government said Monday it had foiled an attempted coup against President Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril by two military officers.

Radio Soleil said "several soldiers were wounded" and 30 soldiers were arrested in the coup attempt early Sunday. It gave no further details.

Government spokesman Frantz Lubin said the coup was led by Sgt. Patrick Frantz Bochard, and former Col. Samuel Jeremie, who escaped from prison following the Sept. 17 coup that brought Avril to power.

"Certain other officers have been discharged," Lubin said. "They had maneuvered to stage a coup against the military government of Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril."

On Sept. 17, rank-and-file soldiers ousted Haitian ruler Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy and installed Avril as president.

Lubin said he had no further information on the circumstances surrounding the coup attempt.

On Monday, Avril presided over ceremonies celebrating Haiti's independence from France in 804 at the National Palace.

A half-mile away, about 6,000 people took part in the fourth day of demonstrations protesting a Roman Catholic church order for an activist priest, the Rev. Jean Bertrand Aristide, to leave Haiti.

The popular priest was to leave the country Monday, but it could not be determined whether he had complied with the order.

The Sept. 17 coup was triggered in part by a massacre at Aristide's church the previous week, in which thugs armed with guns, machetes, clubs and spikes killed at least 12 people, wounded 70 others and burned down the church.

Peace groups protest U.S. policy in El Salvador

By Norman Black, Associated Press

WASHINGTON — About 1,000 demonstrators created a commuter nightmare Monday but failed to achieve their goal of blockading the Pentagon during a boisterous protest of American policies toward El Salvador.

Authorities said about 240 men and women were arrested. There were scattered episodes of fisticuffs between police and demonstrators.

The demonstration, sponsored by a coalition of a half-dozen peace groups, began at 2 a.m. and extended into early afternoon. The protesters succeeded in forcing Defense Department workers to abandon the huge parking lot south of the Pentagon — which normally accommodates 3,700 cars — and to run a human gauntlet through selected entrances to get to their offices.

"But they didn't shut down the building; they just created a lot of inconvenience and long walks," said Glenn Flood, a Pentagon spokesman.

Police, including one officer who was attacked by protesters, arrested several people early when they sat in a road to block a military bus from entering the parking lot.

One demonstrator sprayed red paint across the front of a bus. Protesters then pushed one Defense Protective Service officer to the ground when he tried to arrest the demonstrator and beat the officer before other officers rescued him.

Other protesters went to a grassy area used as a helicopter field outside the Pentagon, where they planted crosses bearing the names of people who have died in El Salvador.

U.S., Britain share Nobel medicine prize

By Larry Gerber
Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Two researchers from the United States and one from Britain won the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday for helping develop drugs to fight AIDS, herpes, leukemia, malaria, heart disease and stomach ulcers.

The award capped more than four decades of pioneering work for Gertrude B. Elion and George H. Hitchings, who began collaborating in 1945 at Wellcome Research Laboratories in Research Triangle Park, N.C.

They share the $390,000 prize with Sir James W. Black of King's College Hospital Medical School in London. His research led to a beta blocker drug for heart disease and a drug for peptic ulcers.

"I wished I had my beta blockers handy," Black, 64, quipped at a news conference at King's College after he learned he won.

Dr. Gosta Garton, a member of the Nobel Assembly at Karolinska Institute, which awards the prize, said the three winners were "well-chosen."

"You can see the direct working effects" of their research, said Garton. "The entire research world knows that they have been in the picture for years."

The Nobel Assembly credited Elion, 70, and Hitchings, 83, with helping develop six different drugs that can be used for at least nine serious conditions.

They included 6-mercaptopurine and thioguanine for leukemia; azathioprine for Counseling service lines grow shorter

Addition of second window reduces student wait time

By May Wong, Staff Writer

Not all of the lines at Murphy Hall are long.

The addition of a second staffed window has shortened the wait for students in line at The Letters & Science Counseling Service, located at A316 Murphy Hall.

"I think students may have gotten the impression that the line was a permanent fixture outside the information window," said Jane Muratore, director of L&S counseling. "The good news for students is that we licked the lines."

The lines move faster because matters that were handled by one window are now divided between the two.

While one window is open for questions on general information and counselor appointments, the other is open for counseling assistant appointments and receiving petitions such as for withdrawals, late drops or course applications.

Boosting the number of counseling assistants from 24 to 30 has further increased availability, said Muratore. The entire counseling staff has the capacity to see an average of 120 to 160 students a day, she added.

Counseling assistants are graduate students who are trained to help new students, freshmen or transfer students with class selection and adjusting to UCLA.

Full-time counselors help continuing students with degree checks or general education (GE) requirements.

The L&S Counseling staff worked on the plan of a second window during the summer. The window was ready for students at the start of the quarter.

Students waiting to see counselors last week attested to a short wait outside the windows.

"I didn't wait long — about ten minutes tops," said Dennis Hernandez, a junior transfer student.

"I think it was a lot worse (last year)," said senior Edward Malconian. "It doesn't seem as long this year."

However, Muratore encouraged students to come now for assistance regarding next quarter's classes. "Don't wait until sixth week . . . Beat the rush. Come in early."

Students may also call 206-6681 to schedule counseling assistant appointments.

Alcoholism and the family:

Expert examines problem, offers advice

By Suzanne O'Connell

Insights and Options
Student Psychological Services

There is a commercial on television for an alcohol treatment program that shows an elephant standing in the family's living room. The family acts as though they don't notice this intrusion, although they are squeezed for space because the elephant is taking up so much room.

The elephant in the commercial represents the enormous amount of energy, attention, feelings, thoughts and actions that the family of an alcoholic devotes to the alcoholic's drinking. This is why alcoholism is called a family disease.

If you are an adult child of an alcoholic family, here are some things that you have probably learned:

- Not to have needs of your own. Or, if you do acknowledge that you have needs, then you probably cannot express them or be "selfish" in a healthy way.
- Denial (i.e., what elephant?).
- To expect chronic disappointment and loss.
- A tolerance of behavior that others would consider inappropriate.
- To take responsibility for the feeling and behavior of others and to blame yourself for their problems.
- Not to ask questions, think or feel.
- To doubt your own perceptions.
- To strive to be completely in control of your life and the lives of those closest to you.
- To mistrust others.

If some of the above consequences of being the adult child of an alcoholic apply to you, there are some options available to you.

Try to understand what role you play in your family. For example, are you the "rebel" whose outrageous misbehavior draws attention away from the alcohol dependent family member?

Or could you be the "Hero" of the family — one who is so good and so accomplished that it diverts attention away from the problem?

Are you a "Rescuer," one who steps in to save the alcoholic by making excuses or filling in for time instead of forcing them to face the consequences of their drinking?

There are several other roles in the drama of an alcoholic family such as the "Caretaker" or the family social worker, the "Blamer" who makes the alcoholic the scapegoat, and the "Adjuster," who passively withdraws from upsetting situations.

Understanding the roles that you play can be the first step to changing.

Learn to focus on your own feelings and needs (No, it is not selfish!). In this way you can begin to develop your own identity and a normal life for yourself.

Don't "enable." It is important that family members understand and then stop the behaviors that allow the alcoholic to continue to drink.

Join a support group. Many of us are waiting for the alcoholic to change, when we could be taking steps toward growth ourselves. Al-Anon Family Groups are self-help groups for family members of alcoholics. Participation is confidential and free and the groups are located in many parts of our city.

Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACA) groups are available in many locations in L.A., including Student Psychological Services (SPS). Campus workshops will be held on three consecutive Tuesday evenings (Oct. 11, 18, 25) from 7-9 p.m. and will feature three videotapes by ACA specialist Claudia Black.

Call SPS if you feel that we could be helpful with a consultation or referral. Our telephone numbers are 825-7985 and 825-0768.

If your need to talk to someone at night, Helpline is available at 825-HELP from 5 p.m. to midnight.

Alcohol's effects: survey reveals UCLA's drinking habits

Editor's note: This story is the second in a series on Alcohol Awareness Week. The first story ran Monday.

By Laurel Eu

As part of a U.S. Department of Education drug prevention grant awarded to UCLA, 2,750 students were surveyed, with 1,296 completed surveys returned. Among the results:

- Of those surveyed, 80 percent used alcohol, with over 35 percent having five or more drinks on at least one day in the past month.
- Most said that they drink for social reasons, with over 70 percent stating they use alcohol to relax in social situations; 85 percent said they use alcoholic beverages to celebrate.
- In the past six months, over 30 percent had driven after having three or more drinks and nearly 40 percent had ridden with a suspected impaired driver.
- Nearly 30 percent had to talk to a friend about his or her drinking and nearly 20 percent had talked to a friend about his or her drug use.
- 42 percent reported suffering from hangovers and 21 percent said they had nausea and vomiting. 22 percent reported acting in ways that they regretted, 16 percent missed class and 26 percent had less energy.

The devastating effects of alcohol have been well documented. Drinking and driving accidents are the number one killer of teenagers in America.

"Alcohol is named as a contributing factor in 55 percent of the arrests made for domestic violence, 65 percent of the murders and 60 percent of child abuse," said Cece Freeman, substance abuse prevention coordinator at Student Health Services (SHS).

Medical evidence indicate that in the short term, alcohol

Pilot attempted to land twice before jet crashed

By Frances D'Emilio
Associated Press

ROME — The pilot of a Uganda Airlines jetliner tried at least twice to land in thick fog before it crashed into houses and trees early Monday, killing 30 of the 52 people aboard, officials and passengers said.

Authorities said the fog and a possible misunderstanding between the pilot and the control tower at Leonardo da Vinci Airport may have caused the crash, which also injured the 22 others aboard the Boeing 707.

Many of the injured were in critical condition with burns, fractures and shock. Wreckage was strewn for a half a mile. Only one of the seven crew members, the steward, survived.

Among the survivors was a British passenger who said he and his wife, holding their 8-month-old son, jumped from the wreckage moments before it went up in flames.

The jet missed the runway by several hundred yards. It tore through a wooden house, clipped a garage, demolished a brick house under construction and plowed through the parking lot of a car rental agency, destroying 75 cars, authorities said.

Only one injury was reported on the ground in the town of Fiumicino, 21 miles southwest of Rome. An occupant of the wooden house, Carlo Satta, 30, was hit on the nose by a beam as he slept in bed.

The majority of those aboard were Ugandans. The British Embassy in Rome said the passenger list included the names of seven or eight Britons, including a dual national. Two Nigerians were listed among the injured.

By early evening, airport authorities said they did not have all the names and nationalities of the dead.

Flight 775 began at London's Gatwick airport late Sunday and was headed for Entebbe Airport in Uganda after a scheduled one-hour stopover in Rome.

The Italian news agency ANSA said the jet was making its final attempt to land at the seaside airport when it crashed at 12:31 a.m. It did not cite any source.

But one survivor said a flight attendant told him shortly before the crash that the aircraft made one attempt to land, was forced to circle because of the fog, and was about to try another landing.

The passenger, John Harigye, former Ugandan ambassador to the Vatican, told reporters from his hospital bed that he next felt a violent collision and found himself upside down in his seat and still strapped in by his seatbelt.

"I realized one side of the plane was gone. I pushed through a hole" and helped another person leave the plane, he said.

The commander of Rome Province's fire department, Guido Chiucini, who helped coordinate the rescue, said the control tower and the pilot might have misunderstood each other since the landing was begun at a very low altitude. He did not elaborate.

But the air traffic controllers' union said there was no misunderstanding. It also provided no details.

A spokesman for the airport administration said on condition of anonymity that tape recordings of conversation between the tower and the crew were turned over to authorities.

Authorities also reported retrieving the flight data recorder.

Pay discrimination suit stands despite concern over cost of damages

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge refused Monday to scale down a pay discrimination suit on behalf of thousands of women in state government but indicated she might restrict the "staggering amount" of potential damages.

U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel denied a request by Gov. George Deukmejian's administration to withdraw class-action status from the suit, which would have eliminated any prospect of back pay.

But Patel said, "I'm concerned about back pay and the staggering amount involved." If she finds that the state discriminated intentionally against women in setting pay scales, she said, she may require a high level of proof for individual women to qualify for back pay.

The suit by the California State Employees Association contends the state has deliberately discriminated against its workers in such jobs as nurse, secretary, librarian, food server and clerk, by segregating women into those jobs and paying them less than male-dominated jobs with equal levels of skill and responsibility.

It has been described as a "comparable worth" suit, referring to the doctrine that jobs of equal value should get equal pay. CSEA resists that label, saying the suit is essentially the same as any other case of deliberate sex discrimination.

A state task force has found sizable pay gaps between male- and female-dominated state jobs, but Deukmejian has vetoed bills to close the gaps, saying pay issues should be addressed in state union negotiations.

The suit does not apply to all women in state employment, only those in job classes that have been at least 70 percent female at least 50 percent of the time between 1972 and the present.

Assistant Attorney General Richard Tullis, who represents the state, estimated the number of employees at up to 100,000 and said the potential back pay was in the billions of dollars.

Reagan OKs Indian gambling regulation

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan on Monday signed legislation setting up a commission to regulate and monitor high-stakes gambling on Indian reservations.

The legislation provides for joint regulation by the tribes and the federal government of bingo, lotto, and certain card games. It would permit casinos, and horse and dog racing on reservations only if the tribes enter into specific contracts with state governments.

Indian tribes, faced with cutbacks in federal money and a limited tax base, have instituted gambling operations to raise needed revenues. Bingo is the predominant, but not the only, form of gambling.

Bingo, lotto, and card games will be monitored by the National Indian Gaming Commission to be established. Card games will be subject to state regulations regarding hours of play and betting limits.

Other forms of gambling, including casinos, horse and dog racing, and jai-alai, will require tribes to enter into compacts with the states.

The national commission will be composed of five people, three of whom must be members of federally recognized tribes. The president would appoint the chairman, who would need Senate confirmation.

The commission is empowered under the act to close tribal games permanently, enforce the collection of fines, conduct background investigations of employees, and monitor all Indian gaming activities.

Measure allows government to put public funds in loan firms

By Jennifer Kerr
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — Backers of Proposition 88, a constitutional amendment on the November ballot, want governments to have one more option in seeking the highest interest rates for investing idle tax dollars.

The proposal, overwhelmingly passed by the Legislature, would add industrial loan companies to the list of places where state and local governments can deposit public funds.

"We believe governments should maximize interest income on deposits of taxpayer dollars while preserving the safety of public funds," say the ballot arguments written by Assemblymen Patrick Johnston, D-Stockton and John Lewis, R-Yorba Linda, and state Controller Gray Davis.

No arguments were filed against Proposition 88.

State and local governments frequently have money to invest, because tax collections come in before the money is spent. The California Constitution currently authorizes the Legislature to allow such public funds to be deposited in banks, savings and loan associations or credit unions in California. Banks and savings and loans have been authorized to take public funds for many years; voters in 1986 added credit unions to the list.

Propositions '88

Proposition 88:

Would allow public funds to be invested in federally insured California industrial loan firms.

The proposal would authorize the Legislature to permit such funds to be deposited in industrial loan companies located in California insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Industrial loan firms were created early in this century to provide loans to industrial and blue-collar workers. They obtain their funds through loans and by taking deposits. There are 55 industrial loan companies with 400 branch offices and about $3 billion in assets in the state.

Industrial loan companies were placed under the jurisdiction of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation about five years ago, meaning they are insured by the federal government.

"Proposition 88 provides more options to public finance officers responsible for reviewing and selecting financial institutions, which encourages competition for government deposits," say the ballot arguments.

"More competitive interest rates will earn greater interest income on taxpayer dollars, since industrial loan companies typically offer slightly higher interest rates," Johnston, Lewis and Davis say.

The Legislature approved, and the governor signed, a bill that will put Proposition 88 into effect if voters approve it.

Court leaves convictions of ex-intelligence analyst intact

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, in a case pitting press freedom against national security, today left intact the espionage and theft convictions of a former U.S. intelligence analyst who gave secret satellite photographs to a British magazine.

The justices, without comment, rejected an appeal by Samuel Loring Morison, who is serving a two-year prison sentence for leaking the photos of a Soviet ship to Jane's Defence Weekly.

Leading newspapers in the United States have said the Morison prosecution threatens freedom of the press guaranteed by the First Amendment. They argued that making it a crime to give information to the news media will chill the public's ability to learn about important national security matters.

Civil liberties advocates said government employees, fearing prosecution, would be afraid to tell reporters information that could prove embarrassing to their superiors. They said much of the national security information printed and broadcast daily in the media could lead to prosecutions.

Morison, grandson of the late Pulitzer Prize-winning naval historian Samuel Eliot Morison, was convicted in October 1985 of giving Jane's photos taken by a KH-11 U.S. spy satellite of a Soviet nuclear aircraft carrier under construction.

Morison, who worked in Suitland, Md., as a civilian for the Navy, also gave the magazine government documents describing a May 1984 explosion at the Soviet Union's Severomorsk naval base.

The government charged him with violating laws against espionage and stealing government documents.

The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the convictions

Ads help Bush close gap with Dukakis in big prize California

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press

In just 60 seconds, George Bush transformed his prospects in California from a potential landslide loss to Democrat Michael Dukakis into a dead-heat battle for the state's 47 electoral votes, the biggest prize in the presidential election.

That magic minute for Bush was comprised of two 30-second television commercials — one attacking Dukakis for pollution in Boston Harbor, the other focusing on the Massachusetts program permitting furloughs for prison inmates.

Before those commercials began airing on TV stations throughout the state, Dukakis held a strong, often double-digit, lead over Bush among California voters in public opinion polls.

The Massachusetts governor had been scoring heavily with strong attacks on the Reagan-Bush administration's environmental record and with speeches linking the vice president to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, whom Dukakis described as a "drug-running Panamanian dictator."

But since the Bush campaign began its Boston Harbor and crime commercials, the gap between the two candidates has narrowed in the nation's largest state.

Dukakis has counterattacked with a commercial contending that "it was Bush's administration that cut funds to clean up Boston Harbor." The spot accused the administration of cutting money allocated to clean up the California coast as well.

"So when you hear George Bush talk about the environment, remember what he did to the environment," the commercial concludes. Dukakis has the support of major environmental organizations in California.

The lure of this state's 47 electoral votes — nearly one-sixth of the 270 needed for election on Nov. 8 — has brought the state a steady stream of campaign visits and an avalanche of money.

"California is an integral part of nearly every winning scenario," said Dukakis campaign communications director Leslie Dach.

Dukakis has spent 10 days in California since Labor Day and will be in the state at least six more days before Election Day.

Bush has been in the state nine days over the same period and also will return before the election. He can expect determined help here from his chief campaign surrogate, President Reagan, who was twice elected governor of California.

A spokesman for Dukakis' state campaign, said at least $10 million would be spent in California boosting the Democratic nominee's election.

Bush campaign aides were unable to supply a figure, but there seemed little doubt that the vice president's backers also were spending millions in the state.

The most recent public poll said Dukakis was leading by 4 percentage points.

No state polling data has been available since the final presidential debate was held in Los Angeles on Oct. 13, but national surveys said Bush was given the edge in that confrontation.

Candidates still clashing with 3 weeks left

By William M. Welch
Associated Press

George Bush, signaling he won't sit on his lead in the campaign's final weeks, returned to the attack Monday and said Michael Dukakis should "stop running down our defenses." Dukakis charged Bush with ignoring the nation's loss of industrial jobs.

Battling the notion that he is slipping hopelessly behind, the Democratic presidential nominee began a campaign swing through industrial states crucial to his chances. He said his Republican rival has "sat on his hands while America's industrial heartland has been fighting for its life."

With three weeks left in the presidential race, aides to Dukakis said he would seek to sharpen the differences between himself and the vice president, particularly on economic issues.

But as he arrived in Ohio, a big state crucial to his chances, a new statewide poll by the Akron Beacon Journal showed Bush holding a double-digit lead.

Bush, buoyant but cautioning against overconfidence, toured a Denver-area defense plant where "Star Wars" research is conducted.

He used the setting to say Dukakis has a "total lack of understanding of our military" and is "trying desperately to jump into the mainstream" by acknowledging a need to modernize land-based nuclear missiles.

"But there is strong reason to doubt that he would do it," Bush said. "He still opposes the MX and he thinks the Midgetman costs too much. So he says he's going to work with Congress to find another way.

"Wake up governor," Bush said, "we've done all that."

He defended the Reagan administration's record on conventional forces against Dukakis' past charges that such forces have been slighted in the push for new, big-ticket strategic weapons systems. Bush dismissed that as "misinformation."

"Governor, it's time to stop running down our defenses," he said.

He also ridiculed Dukakis for supporting some research into Star Wars while dismissing the proposed space-based missile-defense system as a fantasy.

Dukakis and his campaign staff were embracing the idea of running as the underdog. To underscore his resolve, Dukakis said "My spirits are good" and took trumpet in hand to play "Happy Days Are Here Again," a Democratic standard.

Dukakis declared he was "fighting for the values I believe in," and, in a touch of populism, told workers at a copper and brass plant, "I want to be the president who stands up and fights for you."

He pointed to recent trade figures showing imports to the United States were at an all-time high in August and said Bush "has not given the American people a clue as to what he would do" to reverse the trade deficit.

"George Bush sat on the sidelines for eight years while America got beaten in world markets, . . . while a piece of America was being sold off every day at bargain-basement prices," he said.

He also disputed Bush's standard speech line that he wants "a kinder, gentler nation."

"His record tells rural America, the fewer family farmers the better. His record tells middle class families, the glory days are over. Your kids may not do as well as you," Dukakis said.

Meanwhile, Bush won the endorsement of the Teamsters executive board Monday after a poll of the nation's largest union gave him a four-point margin over Dukakis, union officials said.

Just 21,207 members of the 1.7 million-strong Teamsters voted in the poll, said union president William J. McCarthy, who is from Massachusetts and has been critical of the governor.

Court to review U.S. flag burning case

By James H. Rubin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, agreeing to decide how far states may go to limit some forms of political protest, said Monday it will review a Texas law that makes it a crime to burn the American flag.

The justices, setting the stage for a politically and emotionally charged ruling, will consider reinstating a conviction against a man who burned a flag at a demonstration during the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas.

A decision is expected by next July.

In other action, the court:

■ Agreed in a potentially important libel case to review a $200,000 award won against an Ohio newspaper. The justices will examine how closely appeals courts must scrutinize jury findings of "actual malice" when a public figure sues for libel.

■ Said it will hear a Reagan administration appeal aimed at making it easier for the government to conduct tax-fraud investigations. The court will use a California case involving the Church of Scientology to settle a dispute over Internal Revenue Service powers.

■ Agreed in a case from Ohio to decide whether states may give larger retirement benefits to public employees based on the age when they are forced to quit work. In the flag-burning case, the court will review a ruling that the Texas law improperly abridged symbolic expression protected by the Constitution.

The Texas branch of the American Civil Liberties Union urged the justices not to review a ruling that permitted the flag burning. The ACLU said state officials were trying to "create a sense of legal uncertainty" where none exists.

While flag-burning generally has not been a hot issue since the days of Vietnam War protests, the case may attract considerable attention because of the interest focused on patriotic values by the current presidential campaign.

Vice President George Bush, the Republican nominee, has attacked his Democratic opponent, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, for vetoing a law requiring teachers to lead the Pledge of Allegiance in that state's public schools.

The justices agreed Monday to review a ruling by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals that last April threw out the flag-burning conviction of Gregory Lee Johnson, who had been sentenced to one year in jail and fined $2,000.

Johnson was arrested on Aug. 22, 1984, while participating in a demonstration against the Reagan administration and the Republicans.

The protest culminated with a rally in front of Dallas City Hall that included political chants and the flag burning.

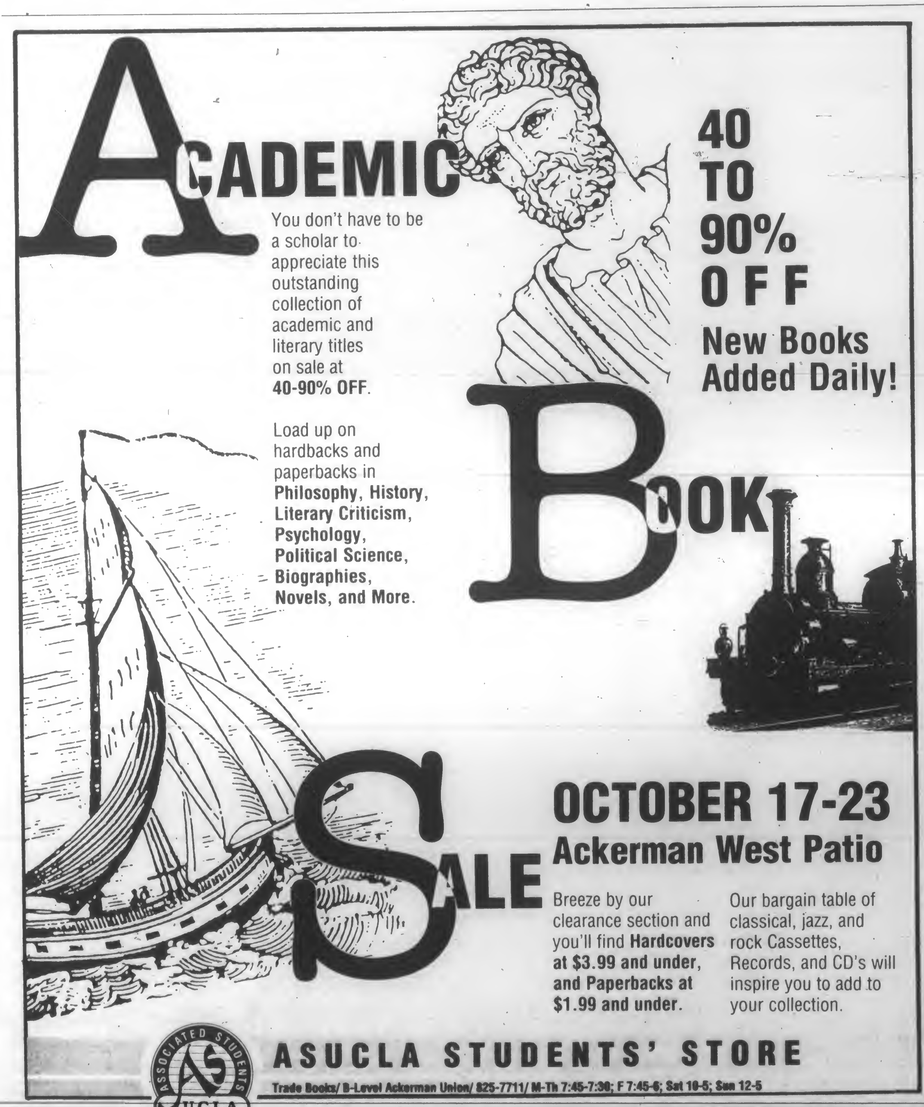
Johnson was convicted by a jury of violating a state law banning the desecration of a venerated object.

The state court said the Texas law against flag desecration is too broad because it seeks to curb expression likely to cause "serious offense."

Police officers who arrested Johnson said they were seriously offended by the flag burning. There also had been considerable vandalism during the demonstration, but Johnson was not charged with that offense.

There also was testimony that the charred fragments of the flag were collected by an employee of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers who was so upset that he later burned the flag's remains in his backyard.

But the state court said seriously offending someone is not the same as inciting to riot — an activity that permits restraints on free speech.



Alcohol

depresses the central nervous system, causing impaired judgment, decreased self-control, impaired coordination, slowed reaction time, slurred speech and sometimes unconsciousness.

In a recent publication produced by UCLA Staff and Faculty Service Center and Student Psychological Services, it was reported that 17 percent of students living on campus had academic difficulties related to alcohol use.

Alcohol also causes long-term injuries. Alcohol abuse may cause permanent brain cell damage, loss of memory, confusion and hallucinations. A recent Columbia University study showed that three to six drinks a day tripled the risk of seizures. Alcohol consumption above that level had even greater risk.

There is some evidence that alcohol may be a factor in the development of high blood pressure, heart enlargement, and heart failure.

When more alcohol is taken than can be metabolized, the liver becomes enlarged, inflamed and eventually scarred, making liver disease a distinct possibility.

Anorexia, nausea and vomiting have also been recorded in medical research as evidence of alcohol's toxic effect on the stomach. Other organs effected are the pancreas and intestines.

Heavy drinking is associated with an increased probability of developing cancers of the tongue, mouth, pharnyx, larnyx, esophagus and liver. The combination of alcohol and smoking increases the rate of head and neck cancers.

In the previously mentioned UCLA publication, it was stated that excessive use of alcohol reduces life expectancy by 12 years. It is the number three killer after heart disease and cancer.

How can one tell if alcohol is becoming a problem?

"The problem drinker usually experiences a powerlessness and does not feel that he or she has a choice," said Freeman. "There is the feeling that there is some loss of control."

Dr. Clive Kennedy at Student Psychological Services (SPS) encourages students to seek help.

"Any student who has a negative experience or a problem associated with alcohol use is welcome to come into SPS for assessment," Kennedy said.

For more information, call Cece Freeman at Student Health Service at 825-7164. Individual and group counseling is available at Student Psychological Services. Their number is 825-0768.

Campaign

Both campaigns are working hard to build grass-roots organizations capable of getting out the vote for their candidates.

Hopcraft said the Dukakis campaign was making 30,000 telephone contacts nightly to recruit volunteers, and would have a leader in each of the state's 23,617 precincts by Election Day.

Lacy said Bush phone banks have contacted 600,000 voters. The Bush campaign also has the benefit of Republican Gov. George Deukmejian's statewide organization.

organ transplant rejection and autoimmune diseases; allopurinol for gout; acyclovir for herpes virus infections; pyrimethamine for malaria; and trimethoprim for bacterial infections and pulmonary infections brought on by AIDS.

The assembly said their ideas also paved the way for development of azidothymidine, or AZT, which is the best documented drug so far in the treatment of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

AIDS, usually transmitted through sexual contact, infected needles or blood transfusions, renders the immune system unable to resist disease. AZT is the only federally approved drug for treating AIDS in the United States.

"I'm pleased more for my descendants than I am for myself," Hitchings said from his office at Wellcome. "I've had a lot of honors, but the most important honors for me have been meeting patients whose lives have been saved or whose children's lives have been saved by drugs I've invented."

Elion said from her home in Chapel Hill, N.C, that she couldn't believe she won and didn't even know she was nominated.

Asked about her greatest achievement, she said: "You can't discriminate among your 'children.' Each one in its own time was the most exciting."

Elion and Hitchings broke new ground in finding the difference in the processing of genetic material between normal cells and cancer cells, protozoa, bacteria and viruses, the Nobel Assembly said.

Knowing those differences allowed researchers to attack disease-causing organisms by interfering with their replication without harming healthy ones, the assembly said.

Black helped develop propranolol, a beta blocker used to treat heart disease and high blood pressure.

Beta blockers block the stimulating effect of adrenaline on the heart, reducing the rate and the force at which the heart pumps blood through the body — and reducing high blood pressure.

Physiologist Bengt Pernow, another member of the Nobel Assembly, said Black made "the greatest breakthrough when it comes to pharmaceuticals against heart illness since the discovery of digitalis 200 years ago."

U.N. peacekeeping forces won the Nobel Peace Prize, announced Sept. 29 in Oslo, Norway. Egyptian novelist Naguib Mahfouz last week became the first Arabic-language literature laureate.

The economics prize is to be announced Tuesday and chemistry and physics on Wednesday.

in April.

"The mere fact that one has stolen a document in order that he may deliver it to the press, whether for money or other personal gain, will not immunize him from responsibility for his criminal act," the appeals court said.

The appeals court also rejected arguments that the espionage laws should be limited to what Morison called "classic spying" cases in which information is passed to a foreign power.

The demonstrators oppose U.S. aid to the Salvadoran government, which has been engaged in a war against leftist guerrillas since 1980. An estimated 60,000 people have died in that conflict, which has produced continuing allegations of "death squad" killings by policemen and soldiers.

The United States considers El Salvador one of its closest allies in Central America. During the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, the Salvadoran government received $85 million in military assistance and $185 million in economic aid. Some 55 U.S. military advisers, the limit set by Congress, are normally assigned to El Salvador to help train the Salvadoran army.

"U.S. policy promotes consolidation of constitutional democracy in El Salvador by assisting the government to defend itself against a determined Marxist insurgency supported by Nicaragua, Cuba and the Soviet bloc," the administration told Congress earlier this year in a military aid request.

The protesters maintain the leftist guerrillas are willing to negotiate an end to the fighting but that the Salvadoran government — backed by the United States — refuses to compromise in any way.

On Monday, they offered loud chants of opposition to U.S. policies, yelling: "No violence, no war, U.S. out of El Salvador," and "Hey hey, ho ho, the Pentagon has got to go."

Through most of the morning, the protesters sat four and five deep in front of several building entrances. Whenever an employee approached, the protesters would lock arms to form a human barricade. Police would then wade in and temporarily break open a path for those wishing to enter the building.

reinforces fears and prejudices of what it's like to be blind and this is repeated with people with other kinds of disabilities," Longmore said.

According to Longmore, a new image of the disabled was introduced during World War II. "The Men," a movie which starred Marlon Brando, portrayed disability as a self-inflicted problem. It portrayed the disabled person as bitter, maladjusted, pitiful and ungrateful to the understanding, undiscriminating able persons.

"The character never encountered discrimination. The non-handicapped person has no problem with the disability, the problem is in the disabled person," said Longmore.

Longmore, who had polio, has published several papers and reviews in the L.A. Times and the journal Social Policy. His new book "The Invention of George Washington" is available at the ASUCLA Bookstore.

In response, Whetstone wrote a more detailed letter to Braun. The vice-chair said he plans to give a copy of the letter to all council members and SIGs.

Whetstone wrote that he wanted "no misconception of the situation."

He explained that the two confirmed attendees to Braun's retreat, himself and BSA staff member Denise Taliaferro, were unable to attend because his car "broke down at 9:30 a.m. the morning of the retreat."

Whetstone claimed that Taliaferro had no other means of transportation to the retreat. BSA had no other confirmed appointees, according to Whetstone.

Whetstone said that the rest of the BSA staff was involved in an "imperative meeting" regarding the organization's orientation, which was to take place the following evening.

Braun added yesterday in an interview with the Bruin that he asked all the SIGs to appoint a liaison to his office. BSA is one of seven SIGs that has not appointed one as of yet, according to Braun.

At press time, the American Indian Students Association, International Students Association, Iranian Student Group, Panhellenic Council, and the Inter-residence Hall Council were the only SIGs to appoint liaisons.

Braun accused BSA of "taking every measure to avoid (the second vice president's) office."

Whetstone said in an interview yesterday that he would arrange a meeting with Braun in future to alleviate any problems between Braun's office and BSA.

The second vice president, whose office is responsible for serving as an liaison between the SIGs and USAC, said that BSA's absence "takes away from their legitimacy as an organization . . . who are supposed to represent all black students."

According to Braun, the retreat addressed problems concerning racism, diversity, the concept of "people of color," USAC's role in terms of SIG sponsorship, and the differences and similarities between the SIGs today.

Gary Murakami, GALA co-chair, said that he had intended to represent his organization at the retreat but he had to work at the last minute.

Braun said yesterday that he sent at least seven memos to all the SIGs regarding the retreat but never received a confirmation that GALA would attend. He also added that he had not received a response from GALA as to why the group had not sent a representative to the retreat.

Macintosh prices are up.
But not at ASUCLA.

Macintosh prices at the ASUCLA Computer Store are always a great deal. But now they're better than ever. Because most of the "real world" is raising prices. We aren't.

Why are our prices still so low? There are two basic reasons.

One reason is Apple Computer. The people at Apple are smart. They know that today's students are going to be tomorrow's leaders — in industry, in government, in education. They want tomorrow's leaders to be Macintosh users. So they're willing to provide special low prices for the educational market.

The other reason is the ASUCLA Computer Store. We're one of the biggest computer stores on any college campus. So we have certain advantages. Like the ability to make large-volume purchases, so we can stave off price increases for a while.

If you're a UCLA student, faculty or staff member, you're eligible to buy your Macintosh from us. But only while you study or work at UCLA.

Look at the prices below and consider. Can you afford to miss the opportunity?

The use of hazardous pesticides unnecessarily jeopardizes lives

By Eric Schulman and Jonathan Kaplan

Jeff Patterson's viewpoint article on pesticide use (Bruin, October 13) was highly inaccurate and misleading, to say the least.

First of all, contrary to what Patterson states, the use of pesticides is an issue of justice and rights. The exploitation of migrant farmworkers is one of the most pressing issues of our time. It is criminal that a country priding itself on justice should have created a field in which the workers must suffer rates of cancer, severe birth defects and poisoning which are enormously higher than those encountered by the general public. America's safety standards are lower and our maximum allowable pesticide residue is higher than those of most industrial nations.

Migrant farmworkers are not "adequately compensated for the risk." Rather, they in general have no other options available to them because of their education level and lack of marketable skills.

In no industry is the risk of exposure to extremely dangerous chemicals, the lack of training and the lack of proper medical care so prevalent as it is in the table grape industry.

Far less dangerous pesticides exist to replace Captan, Parathion, Phosdrin, Dinoseb and Methyl Bromide. Contrary to Patterson's assertion, all five of these chemicals are used upon grapes, and the fact that three are also used upon strawberries and lettuce as well only makes the replacement of these hazardous substances more urgent.

Patterson's comment that pesticides have "reduced the cost of agricultural products and provided many jobs by making . . . marginally productive land profitable" is highly misleading in that pesticides are merely one of the less important means by which marginal lands can be made profitable. This is primarily accomplished by the use of large quantities of water and chemical fertilizers. Even if less dangerous pesticides were used, the lands would still be profitable, and no jobs would be lost.

It is important to note that the United Farm Workers is not calling for a ban of all pesticide use. Rather, it is calling for a ban on the most dangerous pesticides and for higher safety standards. Patterson claims that anyone who asserts that "the use of pesticides is wrong . . . can only be understood to mean that the prevention of starvation is wrong." No one is claiming that the use of all pesticides is wrong. The UFW is claiming that the use of the most dangerous pesticides is wrong when safer pesticides are available which would do the job just as well.

We have shown that the United Farm Workers have not used faulty reasoning in advocating a ban upon these hazardous chemicals. I am not sure what "hidden motives" Patterson thinks the farm workers have. Perhaps they are looking for decent living and working conditions. They don't sound like sinister motives to us. The whole issue of dangerous pesticides comes down to this question: Are marginally higher profits that much more important than worker health?

We need to ask candidates how they intend to pay for the programs they support

William Allen

Ask a child which he likes best, candy or ice cream, and commonly the answer is: "Both." Many politicians are very childlike. "Elect me," they shout. "I am one of you, I understand you, and I am compassionate. Elect me, and I will shower you with more of all good things."

One would perceive from the pitch that choices in this competitive world of limitations are not required, no costs need be borne, prices and rationing are unnecessary, and productivity is not critical. If we, the deserving, have less than we deserve, it is only because of skulduggery and suppression, deprivation and discrimination by them. And "them" includes everyone who is so insensitive as to ask about choices and costs and prices and rationing and productivity.

Perhaps inherently and inevitably, political appeal is visceral rather than intellectual, ad hominem rather than analytic, focusing on payoff rather than production and public subsidization rather than private sacrifice for private ends. We are to receive payoffs and subsidies; they will do the producing and sacrificing. But "they" are hardly mentioned, for it is awkward even to allude to costs and competition when the Grand Theme from the soapbox is concern and compassion.

So how are these deserved goodies being generated? Not by sweat of the brow in wrestling with stingy nature — not by working hard, saving and investing much, innovating boldly, managing wisely — but through self-serving generosity of Big Brother. But Big Brother — the government lords and their bureaucrats — does not actually produce output; he merely pays for output. And how will our Big Brother pay for the increasing bounties of child care and health care and housing and education and job insulation and income support and protection of environment and protection from drugs? If the question of payment is acknowledged at all, the typical answer is simply to tax the wealthy still more and reduce defense spending still more — class warfare and weak defense.

The essence of the political emphasis on gratification at the trough rather than production in the market is the opposite of the economic approach. Economics is the non-romantic concern with how the community determines its priorities, how it can best produce those things it has deemed most valuable, and how the resulting social pie is shared by the members of the group.

Sometimes even journalists catch the sense of economics. A.M. Rosenthal, of The New York Times, suggests the appropriate response to political oratory: "That's nice, but how, how?" . . . How are you going to do all these wonderful things?" The candidate can amuse us with "emotional cadence and rhythmic, repetitive rhetoric," but he fails to tell us how he plans to get to where he says he will take us. "If he does not choose to offer answers as well as hopes, it is because he does not know the answers — or does not want to risk commiting himself . . ." Our question remains, Mr. Candidate: "Yes, but how?" ■

Allen, vice president of the Institute of Contemporary Studies, is a UCLA professor of economics.

Future debates shouldn't have a live audience

Editor:

On October 13, UCLA was honored in hosting the final Presidential debate of 1988. Understandably, the student body was upset that only 25 tickets to the debate were make available to UCLA students. I agree that in this case students should have been given a greater opportunity to attend the debate.

The fundamental issue, however, is whether such a debate should have a live audience or not. During the campaign we have heard many complaints that the candidates are not discussing issues, and that they are resorting to personal attacks. Audible reactions by the live audience during the debate are not only distracting and disruptive, they can be a powerful manipulative tool (why do you think there are laugh tracks during sit-coms). Someone watching the debate on television is more apt to side with a candidate who receives applause and laughter than with one who receives jeers and boos. Thus the candidate has high incentive to fill the audience with a partisan contingency and instruct them to be vocally supportive of him during the debate.

This is also the source for the one-liners: the audience laughs, so do the viewers. The result: shallow debates filled with pleasantries and little substance.

Sure, it's more fun to watch the debates in their present format. Debates on issues can be dry and boring. However, selecting a President is serious, and I think the American voter deserves more from the media than its focus on one-liners and personal attacks. Debates without audiences would certainly help the candidates focus more on the issues, and help the viewers form their own opinions

UCLA already is a diverse campus

Editor:

Nothing appalled me more than reading Adriana Manjarrez's column, "Yearning for diverse faculty at UCLA" (Bruin, Oct. 12). Forgive me, please, if I understood it as a cry for diversity. Well, wake up and smell the coffee, because UCLA is one of the most diverse universities this nation has to offer. For too long I have said nothing, but really need I? Just take a look around.

What Ms. Manjarrez's column should have addressed was the simple fact that UCLA's pie is sliced in favor of minorities, not the other way around. At least that is the impression I got. But, hey, I could be wrong.

In any event, I would like to examine this issue closer. It's unfortunate that since the beginning of our nation everyone hasn't been educated equally, but today UCLA's student body and faculty have come a long way in diversity. And as far as I can conclude, I believe the teaching population fairly reflects an unbiased hiring of qualified candidates.

Moreover, after reading Ms. Manjarrez's column, I got the feeling that the column advanced a racist attitude itself, suggesting that it is more important to be a minority teacher than a qualified one. There is no proof that there has been bias in hiring qualified candidates, and for her to insist UCLA should hire more minority professors is irrelevant. And that the lack of Black and Latino professors has deprived Ms. Manjarrez of her community and identity — well, all I can offer is my deepest apology.

I believe more emphasis should be placed on credentials, not skin color.

Finally, I would like to make it clear that my letter is not aimed at condemning anyone, but I strongly disagree with Ms. Manjarrez's column. This quarter alone I have one Latino professor, a Latino TA and an Asian professor. I do agree that some of my best professors past and present have been Black, Latino, and Asian. Agreed. But what disturbs me is when Ms. Manjarrez cries for diversity in an institution that, in my belief, embraces all races and ethnicities.

Winnebago slogans make UCLA look bad

Editor:

Once again the fraternity boys of UCLA have placed their immaturity and misogyny on public display. This Friday several of the fraternities, in preparation for their drive to Berkeley for Saturday's football game, parked numerous "bagos" (Winnebagos) outside their houses and spray-painted them with assorted offensive slogans, among them:

"No Muff Too Tough"
"Play My Skin Pipe"
"Pussy"

Accompanying these slogans were some drawings: one that was supposed to resemble male genitalia and another that depicted an act of sodomy. Underneath the latter drawing the boys wrote, "Don't laugh — your daughter is in here!"

I understand that these boys are, for reasons I can only imagine, afraid of women and must humiliate and insult them in order to feel superior to them and thus overcome their fear. If they went about this in their own houses or just amongst themselves, then I wouldn't care. But to write it out in large, colorful letters in public is offensive and inexcusable.

Regrettably, these "bagos" and their occupants represented our university this weekend in Berkeley. They are truly an embarrassment to the rest of the UCLA community and to the football team as well. They have only served to perpetuate in Northern California UCLA's image as a hotbed of sexism. Thanks a lot, guys.

■ ALBUM: Seventh Dream In Teenage Heaven. Love and Rockets. On RCA/Beggar's Banquet Records.

At long last, Seventh Dream in Teenage Heaven, the first album by those psychedelic maestros Love and Rockets, has been released domestically after three years of remaining on the import backburner.

It's a pleasant surprise to know RCA Records had it in their hearts to release, what is by far, the trio's best work of their three album career.

Love and Rockets has been one of those bands that's virtually impossible to ignore, no matter what taste one's definition of music rests among.

Let's take it from the top.

Express, their second release, displayed a hard, guitar-driven beat. Earth Sun Moon, their latest, showed a gentle side with an acoustic melody. And during their last tour, Love and Rockets introduced new material which bordered on down-home American rockabilly.

Seventh Dream is yet another story. It's full of energy and inspiration: the type that drove the Beatles to give us Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, or the Who to give us Quadrophenia, or even Pink Floyd to give us The Wall. It's that perfectly timeless album where everything works.

That should be no surprise, though, to anyone who's done a little digging into the past of

Icicle Works' rewarding less-traveled path

By Rob Winfield

■ ALBUM: Blind. The Icicle Works. On RCA/Beggar's Banquet Records.

Four years ago, the Icicle Works soared to the top of the Billboard charts with a bouncy pop single, "Whisper to a Scream (Birds Fly)."

Theoretically, this trio from the U.K. should have continued on a popularity streak, churning out a series of accessible chartbusters.

Not so.

The Icicle Works chose a path which is usually witnessed in quite the opposite manner: a mainstream artist decides that the mainstream is no longer the path to take, so the artist chooses a path of obscurity where the only audience the artist wants to please is the artist himself.

At the time, it was a turn that certainly was unexpected, but also for the better.

And since then, the Icicle Works have given the music world the critically acclaimed The Small Price of a Bicycle and the more instrumentally versatile If You Want to Defeat your Enemy Sing His Song. Spanning those two albums were songs like the Springsteenesque "Understanding Jane" and the paisley powerhouse "Evangeline."

Every song seems to mark a change for the Icicle Works, and their fourth and latest album Blind is no exception. This time the emphasis is a blending of psychedelia, blues, funk and rock 'n' roll. Surpris-

Musical 'Les Miz' does justice to Hugo's vision

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ THEATER: Les Miserables. Presented by Cameron Mackintosh. By Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg, based on the novel by Victor Hugo. Additional English lyrics by Herbert Kretzmer. With William Solo, Jeff McCarthy, Elinore O'Connell, Michelle Nicastro, Karen Fineman, Reece Holland. $16 student discount for all shows except Saturday evening. Running at the Shubert Theater, 2020 Ave. of the Stars, until April 30, 1989.

Once in a great while, a musical event comes along where everything works well together: music, lyrics, storyline, acting, directing. Based on Victor Hugo's 19th-century French novel, Les Miserables is one of those shows.

Probably the single biggest phenomenon in the musical world in the '80s, Les Miserables has been an astounding critical as well as popular success. It was awarded eight Tony Awards in 1987, including Best Musical. After seeing L.A.'s production of the blockbuster, now currently running at the Shubert Theater, it is not difficult to understand the show's tremendous appeal.

Composed by Frenchmen Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg in the late 1970s after ten months of work, Les Miserables opened in Paris in 1980 and was seen by more than one-half million people. In its English adaptation (with lyrics by Herbert Kretzmer), the show was subsequently an unprecedented hit in London, where it broke all existing records in ticket sales. The musical opened on Broadway in March, 1987. Since then, local productions have appeared in cities all over the world, from Tokyo to Stockholm — and, since last June, Los Angeles.

What accounts for the extraordinary impact that this musical has had on audiences around the world? There are many reasons, but the primary ones are: universal story, compelling music, and superb acting.

Spanning almost two decades (from 1815 to 1832) in the lives of its memorable characters, Victor Hugo's greatest work is one of the supreme achievements in world literature. Teeming with believable characters entwined in its vast welter of true events, it sends forth timeless evocations of the human condition, such as youth, old age, justice, greed, cruelty — but foremost among these: love, compassion and spiritual redemption.

Taking Hugo's novel as inspiration for a musical could have been either a stroke of genius (if the composers proved equal to the Herculean task of

Studs Terkel: Second thoughts on the American Dream

By Nancy Walker, Contributor

The Great Divide bespeaks more than the the deepening chasm between the haves — and have-somewhats — and the have-nots . . . It is the cleft that has cut us off, one from the other and, indeed, from our very selves. It is the breach that has cut off past from present.' — Studs Terkel

STUDS TERKEL's latest book The Great Divide presents a portrait of America in the 1980's, a fractured society in which individuals are alienated from each other and themselves, resulting in a national identity crisis. Terkel assembles the fragments of broken identities into a composition of reflection and speculation based on the one common denominator of our nation: The American Dream. This compilation of ninety-five interviews with Americans from all walks of life reveals personal visions which are as diverse as the individuals' backgrounds. However, their visions of the American Dream share the same archetypes: isolation, hopelessness, fear and bewilderment. For many today, the American Dream means nothing more than broken ideals and disillusionment, suffering from lack of imagination and our nation's "loss of historical meaning," resulting in "cultural amnesia."

Without committing himself to opinions or values, Terkel (who will speak today in Ackerman Grand Ballroom from 3 to 5 p.m.) shares his vision of America by prompting and guiding people to discuss the issues which interest him, such as the young people who are ignorant about America's past, the plight of the family farmer and of labor unions, and religious and racial conflict. In his book are the voices of yuppies, teachers, and '60s activists who are now working on Wall St. and in advertising firms, suffering poverty only in terms of ethics and time. There are Vietnam vets, and a grandmother who is serving a six-year prison term for dismantling a nuclear missile.

Studs Terkel has written seven books, the majority of which are based on interviews with the "average" American. All have received international acclaim, and in 1984, his best-seller The Good War won the Pulitzer Prize. Born in 1912, Terkel grew up in Chicago, where he has acted in radio soap operas and television, been a disc jockey, and a sports commentator. He recently appeared in John Sayles movie, Eight Men Out, and he has a radio program creating a score that was as good as the novel — no small feat) or, more likely, a foolhardy blunder (if they failed). In this case, it was unequivocally a stroke of genius.

Hugo's transcendent moods and fluctuations are rendered powerfully through the musical score by Boublil and Schonberg. In terms of scope of emotions and human situations, Les Miserables arguably surpasses any other musical done so far.

Boublil and Schonberg have achieved the seemingly impossible: transform one of humanity's greatest literary testaments into three-and-a-half hours of awe-inspiring passion and sheer entertainment on the stage. The scintillating music alternates between peaks of vigor and grace. The lyrics exhibit a remarkable suppleness, literally exploding with grand conviction, or coalescing with healing tenderness.

Admittedly, Hugo does not deal much with psychological complexities, a la Flaubert. But his main strength is invoking humanity's eternal emotions and concerns simply and powerfully — with a passionate, absorbing poignancy.

Unjustly-condemned ex-convict Jean Valjean, the leading character in Les Miserables, epitomizes the triumph of the human spirit as he struggles to put a shameful life in prison behind and start a new life in the grace of God. Police inspector Javert is untouchable as a man ruled by a sense of unyielding justice and moral righteousness, undone in the end by the very inflexibility of his convictions. Fantine is a prototype of the struggling young woman, cruelly abandoned by love and fate, who is eventually forced to yield to prostitution in order to support her ailing child. Student-revolutionary Marius is the hopelessly romantic youth who would die for love. And there are few people as unsympathetic as the avaricious innkeeper Thenardier and his wife. All of these are almost archetypal portrayals of humanity; and we have seen, or been, each one of them in our lives.

The element that either makes or breaks a musical is the songs. And Les Miserables, to put it simply, has the most engrossing score that I have ever heard. It has everything: stirring moments of grand inspiration (''Do You Hear the People Sing,'' ''Red and Black''), melancholy introspection (''Empty Chairs and Empty Tables,'' ''Turning''), heart-rending resignation (''I Dreamed a Dream''), and more than its share of sparkling love songs (''A Heart full of Love,'' ''On my Own'').

The musical brims with memorable scenes, with moods ranging from quiet intimacy to rousing revolutionary fervor. Boublil's music and Schonberg's lyrics brilliantly capture the sense of lifelong journey and adventure embodied in Hugo's novel. The musical's array of top-notch songs and dramatic highlights is overwhelming.

The actors in L.A.'s company are generally superb. William Solo plays a commendably understated Jean Valjean as counterpoint to Jeff McCarthy's impressive Javert. However, although Solo does'nt cut as imposing a figure as McCarthy's ramrod inspector, his compassion — especially during the song ''Bring Him Home,'' Solo's chance to shine — comes through loud and clear. For his part, McCarthy is impeccable as Javert, radiating cold, cruel authority with every step. His moment in the show, ''Stars,'' is a triumph evoking eternal conviction.

The female characters are well-delineated as well, led by UCLA alumna Elinore O'Connell in the role of the unfortunate Fantine. O'Connell's robust, searing vocals reflect the anguish of a woman in the grips of utter despair. Karen Fineman was outstanding as Fantine's daughter Cosette, whom Valjean rescues from the Thenardiers' cruel mistreatment and raises as his own child. Fineman sparkles in several moving scenes, whether expressing her love for for Marius, or questioning her taciturn father about his/her past.

The only real gripe I have is Michelle Nicastro in the choice role of tragic Eponine, whose love for Marius is unrequited. I found her stylized, overly deliberate phrasing slightly distracting, and wished that she had adopted a simpler, more straightforward approach.

Last but not least, Gary Beach and Kay Cole as the Thenardiers generated the musical's most infectious comic scenes, as they hammed up their cynical, misanthropic views of human nature. Their uproarious renditions of ''Master of the House'' and ''Beggars at the Feast'' provided welcome comic relief from the more serious and introspective moments in the show.

Ultimately, Les Miserables succeeds thanks to its care for detail in character development and dramatic construction — as in Chicago which is broadcast across the nation (KCRW in Los Angeles).

Bruin: Today the American Dream seems better defined as the American Myth, a myth of success and happiness propagated chiefly by the media, which many Americans continue to subscribe to regardless of its failure to fulfill their dreams. In which ways has the meaning of the American Dream changed since you graduated from law school in 1934, as opposed to its meaning for young Americans in 1988?

Terkel: Back then there was the Depression, and I hope the media will recognize that! However, there was the New Deal and the W.P.A. There were people in Roosevelt's administration who understood and acknowledged the needs of people. Jobs were created and dignity was restored. There has been a period of prosperity in this country for quite some time. Now millions are unemployed.

When I recently traveled through Iowa and Minnesota, all the farms were boarded up; it was like Grapes of Wrath. Now there's agribusiness. During the Great Depression the homeless were regarded as ''victims.'' Now they're called ''losers.'' The unemployment figures may have gone down, but nobody mentions the steelworker who was making $13.00 an hour and is now pumping gas for $3.50 an-hour. Today the steelwork plants are closed down and we have the materials shipped in from Third World countries. There are unions busted today. We read of airplane crashes and near-misses due to overworked, unseasoned air controllers. Our priorities have taken a necrophilic turn and we'd rather risk death than acknowledge the 11,000 blacklisted, seasoned air controllers, whose strike was broken in Reagan's first year of office. Our nation is suffering from a collective Alzheimer's disease — an acceptance of ignorance, apathy, and an overloading of trivia. Nobody's arguing — all due to the media. We should eliminate paid commercials on television so all can have equal time. Eliminate polls, eliminate pundits, to stimulate argument among people.

Bruin: Many people you interviewed said they voted for Reagan, even though they thought he was somewhat of an idiot. This is partly due to his ability to create a likable personality through the media. Some people believe Dukakis has suffered in this campaign due to his inability to create such an image of personal warmth. To what extent has this issue of likability vs. capability distorted this decades' campaigns?

Terkel: Ronny had more press than any other president in history. Thanks to television, we now vote for the image. Kennedy didn't defeat Nixon just because of issues, but because he had a better make-up man. Dukakis is defeating himself. 30% of those making $20,000 or less are registered. Dukakis is against the registration of the have-nots that Jesse Jackson is for. He would rather lose with a status-quo. This is also true of Mondale. The only way Mondale or Dukakis could win is by default. Dukakis denied being a liberal. Well, what does the phrase ''liberal'' mean? Being tolerant to the opinions of others, generous, and open-hearted. When Dukakis denied being a liberal he insulted the intelligence of the American public.

Bruin: In his book American Hunger, Richard Wright said, "Our America is frightened of fact, of history, of processes, of necessity. It hugs the easy way of damning those whom it cannot understand, of excluding those who look different, and it salves its conscience with a self-draped cloak of righteousness." Why do you think America drapes its aggressiveness in a cloak of righteousness in external affairs, such as imperialism, yet is so tolerant and accepting of blatant aggressiveness in internal affairs, such as racism?

Terkel: We confuse Hollywood with reality. We are a country that is mixed up by machismo, T.V., and trivia. We got a bloody nose in Vietnam. We walked in there like John Wayne. We didn't question what we were doing there. Now we think the world is laughing at us. So now we're Muhammad Ali, and there is Grenada, which is Woody Allen, and Muhammad Ali goes and clobbers Woody Allen. Reagan said that Grenada was a triumph, that we went over there to save those students, and then we found out that the only thing we were saving them from was an airport being built for tourism. In his book Escape from Freedom, Erich Fromm points out that if a man says, ''I'm the greatest, most generous-hearted, bold, heroic guy,'' we say he's a nut. But if he says this of his country, we call him a patriot.

Bruin: You interviewed Dr. Martin Luther King and you were present in Montgomery during the Freedom Movement's walk from Selma to Montgomery in 1965. One black man in your book said it is hard to get people to acknowledge that racism exists today, while a KKK member said a race war is inevitable in this country. Do you think the progress of the Civil Rights movement has stagnated in the last fifteen years, and if so, in what ways does this stagnation represent the moral attitude of the nation at present?

Terkel: Well, changes have taken place. However, a few blacks holding office in the South does not matter for the overwhelming majority. There needs to be a program of evaluation and new priorities. Full employment has to be the answer because if you don't have the buck . . . This doesn't mean military manufacturing. Twice as many jobs could be created for civilians with what we spend on the military today, by building low-cost housing, schools, and parks.

Bruin: You were blacklisted in the '50s for your so-called misbehavior in the '40s and '50s. How great of an impact did this have on your career?

Terkel: Mine has been a strange career. There was what was called T.V. Chicago Style-improvisation, non-formulated. There was Dave Garaway, Kukla, Fran, and Ollie, and Stud's Place. I made speeches, I was anti-Jim Crow, so I was considered subversive. If I had been in Hollywood or New York it might have been a lot worse, but I was known in Chicago, so it was not too bad. Because I didn't do some of the T.V. stuff I might have done, I wrote books, which I might not have done if I hadn't been blacklisted.

ingly, this bizarre combination actually blends rather smoothly.

Thanks to vocalist/guitarist Robert Ian McNabb's superior songwriting ability, he is able to incorporate his bellowing — and believe me, it is bellowing — vocals with a gentle layering of keyboards, guitar, and bass.

Blind's strongest asset is the consistency with the band's previous work. Not only are the Icicle Works stepping in uncharted territory for them, but they are incorporating their past efforts to make this fourth album their strongest collection of material.

Every one of the eleven tracks stands on its own. "Hot Profit Gospel" gains its strength by diving into a flowery era of psychedelic keyboard solos. And upbeat rockers like "Shit Creek" and "High Time" show that these lads can whip out some fancy guitar work if need be.

Personally, I admire the Icicle Works for their (as much as I hate the description) beautifully structured ballads. In the past, songs like the gutsy grind of "Up Here in the North of England" and the synth-dominated "Walking with a Mountain" have shown that the Icicle Works know the fine essence of writing a ballad.

And again, their skills remain in full force. The anthem-like "Here Comes Trouble" and the strikingly upward spiral of "Starry Blue Eyed Wonder" are two of the more prominent tracks on Blind.

So give the Icicle Works an opportunity to win you over. They're one of those unique bands who know how to write music through a tapestry of styles, interwoven to perfection.

Terkel

Bruin: How capable is America of another outbreak of hysteria such as Red Channels, which occurred during the era of McCarthyism?

Terkel: Blacklisting comes in different ways at different times. The senator Huey Long said if totalitarianism should ever come to the U.S., it would come in the form of 100% Americanism. The phrase "card-carrying liberal" comes from the phrase "card-carrying communist." Eventually the phrase could turn into "card-carrying member of the same society"! Now the Cold War is diminishing because of everything that Gorbachev is doing. So you see, we don't have so much suspicion of "them" anymore.

Bruin: You wrote a book called Giants of Jazz and you were a jazz critic for the Chicago Sun-Times. There has been a resurgence in the traditional jazz style in this decade. What do you think this reflects about the attitude of today's younger generation, and what do you think of some of the younger jazz musicians, such as Wynton Marsalis?

Terkel: I think its a good sign that there has been a renewed interest in jazz. The young are underestimated. When we talk of the young, we think of yuppies, but yuppies are the minority of the young. There is a bewilderment today, but there is also a hunger for something. I admire Wynton Marsalis very much, although I'm an old-time traditionalist. Jazz is the original American art form. Improvisation, creativity — and blacks played the key role. Blacks and whites liking and playing the same music together is very exiting for me.

Rockets

these three lads: Daniel Ash, guitars and vocals, and Kevin Haskins, drums, created two hauntingly atmospheric albums in a band known as Tones on Tail; David J., bass and vocals, wrote three brilliant jazz/acoustic albums under his own name; and to top that all off, all three spent four memorable years in Bauhaus, spawning a new music genre known as gothic rock.

So with that history out of the way, I'm pleased to inform the reader that Seventh Dream contains a few added goodies not on the import.

First, there's two additional tracks, "God and Mr. Smith" and "Inside the Outside," previously unavailable in the U.S. (unless, of course, one is an impulsive import record collector, like myself). The former is a remixed instrumental of another track on the album, "If There's a Heaven Above." The latter is Love and Rockets at their furious best.

Second, there's a remix of "Dog End of a Day Gone By," a song one comes to expect at their live performances. Personally, I couldn't tell the difference from the original version, except for the longer length. But that's only a minor complaint.

Third, the original gatefold cover painting remains intact. Most covers usually aren't that intriguing. However, this one is so bizarre that it's impossible to put off. Besides, I think the only way to comprehend the relationship between lizards, checkerboards, and spacemen would be through the use of artificial stimulants.

And for those readers who still remain in the dark about one of the few success stories of the '80s, I'll say this much: Seventh Dream even features a track used in the last film John Hughes directed, She's Having a Baby, called "Haunted When the Minutes Drag."

This is truly an album which should be a part of every record collection. And even though it's three years old, I'd still grant Seventh Dream in Teenage Heaven the honor of best album of '88.

well as its faithful commitment to Hugo's larger vision affirming life and humanity. It evokes life so vibrantly and cogently in all its shades that it is difficult not to be swept away by the musical's majestic gleam.

Because of its all-encompassing scope in evoking emotions and human situations, Victor Hugo's Les Miserables has enlightened and mesmerized readers for more than a century. Rich, ambitious, and moving, the musical adaptation of his novel proves more than adequate to the task of revitalizing Hugo's message for an Eighties' audience of musical goers. Les Miserables is that rare instance where a show has met and even surpassed its great expectations.

ASTRO•GRAPH

Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Oct. 17, 1988
There are indications of growth where money is concerned in the year ahead. Increased earnings should make it possible to get some luxury items you previously denied yourself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Let your heart rule your head today when dealing with people who have treated you kindly in the past. You'll think more highly of yourself if you go out of your way to reciprocate. Major changes are ahead for Libra in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A friend who is always competitive might try to do something today to upstage you. Don't be concerned, because those efforts will prove futile.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Don't waste your energy on small talk today. Let those with whom you're negotiating know you mean business when discussing matters that affect your purse or career.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Acknowledge in public today those who have been instrumental in your recent success. This will assure their continued support.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) People who like you will try to do all they can to help you today, but don't be unrealistically expectant. Remember they are not obligated to do anything.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Today talk to a close associate who has the reputation of being cool under fire before making a decision about which you have doubt.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Things should go well today where your material aspirations are concerned, even though you might not get everything you want.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Disagreements are possible today in situations where you work closely with subordinates. However, you're not apt to have problems with equals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) The bottom line is of the utmost importance today. Don't be dismayed if some of your steps don't come off flawlessly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) People outside of the family circle will find you a very agreeable companion today. You might not get as high of a rating if your kith and kin were polled.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Don't let others dictate how you should spend your money today. Unless they share your obligations, they have no right to comment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You're a bit more vulnerable than usual today and could be manipulated by someone who has an ulterior motive. Keep your guard up in financial affairs.

kees won 7-2 to take the World Series.

Welch has lost a little off his fastball, but still throws hard and has improved his curve.

Tudor is a master of off-speed pitching and could provide problems for the A's free swingers if he's on.

His problem has been inactivity because of an injury.

In his last start of the season, Tudor had spasms in his right hip and was scratched from his scheduled start in Game 2 of the NL playoffs. He pitched Game 4 against the Mets and allowed eight hits and four runs in five innings.

"I'm not one hundred percent, but I won't be at any point the rest of the Series so it doesn't matter," Tudor said.

Tudor came to the Dodgers on Aug. 16 from St. Louis for slugger Pedro Guerrero. He was 4-3 with and a 2.41 ERA in nine starts with Los Angeles.

The Dodgers made the trade after it became evident that Fernando Valenzuela would not make it back from a shoulder injury.

"The only experienced starter we had was Orel Hershiser and I told (General Manager) Fred Claire we needed an experienced pitcher," Lasorda said.

Tudor is making his sixth World Series start. He is 3-2 with a 4.03 ERA. He made three starts in the 1985 Series against Kansas City and two last year against Minnesota.

He won Games 1 and 4 against the Royals, but was blown out in Game 7, allowing three hits and five runs in 2 1-3 innings as Kansas City won 11-0 behind Bret Saberhagen's five-hitter.

Dodgers, A's head to Game 3

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

OAKLAND, Calif.— As a 21-year-old rookie, Bob Welch struck out Reggie Jackson to win Game 2 of the 1978 World Series for Los Angeles. His challenge this time is to beat the Dodgers.

Los Angeles carries a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series into the Oakland Coliseum for Game 3 Tuesday night after beating the Oakland Athletics in the first two games at Dodger Stadium.

Kirk Gibson hit a dramatic two-run homer with two outs in the ninth inning for a 5-4 victory in Game 1 and Orel Hershiser pitched a three-hitter to beat the A's 6-0 Sunday.

Welch, who pitched for the Dodgers for 10 years, will be opposed by left-hander John Tudor.

"I have lots of friends on the Dodgers and I was rooting for them to win the playoffs against the (New York) Mets," Welch said. "I know them and they know me so I don't think there's any advantage there."

Welch went to Oakland in a three-team deal last winter that also involved the Mets. The Dodgers ended up with relievers Jay Howell and Jesse Orosco and shortstop Alfredo Griffin.

"One of the things you want to do when you trade is make a deal that helps both clubs," Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda said. "We were last in hitting last season, last in fielding and we needed to help our bullpen.

"We hated to trade Bobby Welch. But we helped our bullpen and Alfredo Griffin helped Steve Sax at second. He solidified our infield defense."

Welch was 17-9 for the A's with a 3.64 earned-run average and struck out 158 in 244 2-3 innings. The 17 victories represented a career high for Welch.

"I told the A's when we traded them Welch that we had just traded them the AL West title," Lasorda said.

In Game 2 of the 1978 Series against the New York Yankees, the Dodgers had a 4-3 lead in the top of the ninth when reliever Terry Forster put runners on first and second. Lasorda brought in Welch, and the right-hander got Thurman Munson on a soft liner to second and struck out Jackson swinging on a 3-2 fastball.

"That all seems so long ago and it happened so fast I hardly remember what I felt," Welch said.

Jackson got his revenge in Game 6 when he hit a long homer off Welch and the Yan-

Jackson already rolling

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY — For Bo Jackson, football in Kansas City was much lovelier the second time around.

Last year, hostility and futility greeted the Kansas City Royals' outfielder-turned-running-back. When he showed up at Arrowhead Stadium in the hated uniform of the Los Angeles Raiders, he was showered with abuse. He gained only one net yard on three carries before an ankle injury forced him from the game, won by the Kansas City Chiefs 16-10.

But Sunday, before a crowd of more than 77,000, Jackson carried 21 times for 70 yards and caught two passes for 10 yards in his 1988 NFL debut. He also scored the final touchdown on a 1-yard plunge as the Raiders beat the Chiefs 27-17.

"This feels a whole lot better than last year," said Jackson, who showed steady improvement this past baseball season, hitting 25 home runs and batting .246 for the Kansas City Royals.

The crowd, the biggest in Kansas City since 1972, showed mostly support for their full-time outfielder and the Raiders' part-time running back.

"When I walked out of that tunnel for the first half, the only thing I was thinking about was the Chiefs' defense," Jackson said. "They gang-tackle well. I knew they were going to play hard and hit hard."

Jackson did not start. But Marcus Allen, the Raiders' veteran star running back, left after one play and Jackson came in to get the ball on four of the Raiders' first five plays. He scored late in the fourth period after Steve Beuerlein hit Mervyn Fernandez with a 35-yard pass near the goal line. After getting back to his feet, Jackson threw the football as far into the crowd as he could.

"We had a great game," Jackson said. "I expected us to do well, but the judgment of how well I do is up to the coaches and the media."

Jackson did not report to the Raiders until Wednesday.

"Bo surprised me," Raiders coach Mike Shanahan said. "He came in in excellent shape, and practiced three or four times a day. He adjusted to the offense very quickly. It looked like he adjusted to the offense more as the game went on. I was pleased with the way he handled himself."

Playing only half a season will cut down on Jackson's statistics, but he sees some advantages to the unusual arrangement. "I'll only be half as tired when the season's over," he said. "I'm just going to try and help them win as many games as possible."

Several Royals watched from the Raiders' side of the field, including catcher Jamie Quirk, third baseman Kevin Seitzer and pitcher Bret Saberhagen.

"He reminds me of Earl Campbell," Chiefs defensive end Mike Bell said, referring to the former Houston Oilers star.

Women's soccer shuts out Northridge, 3-0

By Wendy Witherspoon
Staff Writer

The UCLA women's soccer team put away yet another weekend of wins last weekend with its 3-0 shutout of California State University, Northridge on Sunday.

When compared with Saturday's action-packed 4-3 win over SDSU, Sunday's victory was a case of just getting the job done. "Before the game, I told them that the key would be to match the intensity (of the SDSU game)," said coach Afshin Ghotbi.

The only scoring of the first half came after a corner kick was taken by midfielder Sondra Shatkins. On the set piece, Shatkins booted the ball to the near post, where it was received by forward Pam England and tapped to counterpart Lisa Vanderburg, who got credit for the goal.

"I call her (Vanderburg) 'Ice,' because she has a lot of composure, and she's so steady," said Ghotbi. Vanderburg and England returned to the game field Sunday after sitting out Saturday's game due to red cards received in Cal Poly.

"They came out strong in the second half," said Ghotbi about CSUN. But forward Kris Fontana was not to be intimidated and hammered one in after receiving an assist by sophomore Susan Viesel.

On the third and final goal, it was Fontana again who came through, with an assist for sophomore Kirsten Pinnell to put the game away.

SDSU's three goals on Saturday ended UCLA goalkeeper Donna Morris' streak of shutouts. But Sunday's shutout over CSUN started what may be another shutout streak and brought the total to 5 for the season.

"Northridge played with a lot of heart," said Ghotbi. "Everybody plays UCLA hard. If Northridge would have beaten us today, it would have been their season," he said.

The victory over CSUN brings UCLA's regular season record to 6-0-1.

The Bruins' next game will be against USC, having already defeated Troy once this season, 3-0. The game will be held Saturday at California State University, Los Angeles at 7:30 pm.

LYNETTE TSAI/Daily Bruin

The UCLA women's soccer team is unbeaten after seven regular games, compiling a 6-0-1 record.

Frosh May wins title

UCLA's Alysia May burst onto the national collegiate tennis scene with a flash, as the freshman won the prestigious Rolex Invitational tennis tournament in Irvine last weekend, defeating Pepperdine's Jana Kovacevich in the finals, 6-2, 7-5.

The win represents quite an upset in the world of women's college tennis, as Kovacevich was ranked No. 12 in the Volvo national collegiate rankings. May, who prepped at Westlake School for Girls in Los Angeles, was unranked.

The road to the finals certainly went through Westwood, as Kovacevich had knocked off Bruin freshman Mamie Ceniza in the quarterfinals, while May had to defeat teammate Stella Sampras to reach the finals.

and defensively."

One significant development for the Bruin offense was the return of Brian Brown.

Brown was the second-leading rusher for UCLA last year behind Gaston Green, and was counted on for big things in 1988. However, Brown pulled a hamstring before the season and spent the first month of the season on the shelf.

Of course, Eric Ball and Shawn Wills have done an outstanding job this season, but a team can never have too many good players.

"The return of Brian Brown makes us a better football team," said Donahue. "Last year he was one of the better kickoff return men in the conference. Being able to put him back there with Shawn (Wills) gives us two very explosive runners."

Another element Brown offers is his pass-catching ability. In the first five games this year,Ball caught five passes and Wills caught one. Against Cal, Brown pulled in four balls for 30 yards.

"Brian is a viable receiving threat out of the backfield. He is the best receiver of all the backs," Donahue said. "Also, he adds the dimension of speed. He may not be the fastest, but he is the quickest of the backs."

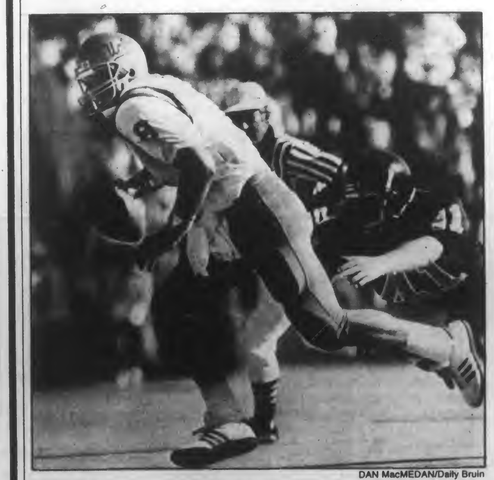
The most important thing about Saturday was that Brown emerged without reinjuring his leg.

On the negative side of the coin, the Bruins got some bad news on the injury front coming out of Berkeley.

For one thing, outside linebacker Carnell Lake and left guard Rick Meyer sprained their ankles on the artificial turf. In addition, split end Reggie Moore has a slightly separated shoulder. Donahue said that those three players are question marks that will be answered this week in practice.

Slightly more serious is the ankle injury to Corwin Anthony. Charles Arbuckle has already missed a month of play, so the tight end position is a little thin right now. Look for Randy Austin to start against the Wildcats.

David Keating, also injured against Cal, should be back.



DAN MacMEDAN/Daily Bruin

Troy Aikman scrambles for some of his 33 yards last Saturday at Cal. Aikman's performance in that game, 322 yards passing for two touchdowns and one touchdown rushing, put even more fuel into his run for the Heisman Trophy. At this point in the season, most national experts have Aikman tabbed as the leading candidate.

UCLA hockey team prepares to take the ice

By Nancy Stewart
Staff Writer

The UCLA ice hockey team, in the midst of adjusting to a variety of structural changes in the league, coaching staff, and team from last year, is preparing for another full season, as it officially starts league play this week.

Most importantly, player participation on the club team, which falls under the administrative umbrella of the Wooden Center-housed University Recreation Association (URA), has increased dramatically this year, allowing UCLA to ice a second squad.

In addition, the league has been redefined, as the Southern California Collegiate Hockey Association (SCCHA) changed its name to the Pacific Collegiate Hockey Association (PCHA), and now includes USC in Division I and the newly-formed UCLA II team, along with Pepperdine in Division II.

"The fact that we're going to play USC this year in league makes everything so much more interesting, with all the rivalry between the schools," said returning head coach Jack White. Although the two teams battled twice on the ice last year, with the Bruins beating Troy 3-2 in the first and tying 2-2 in the second, the games were considered exhibition only.

Coach White, entering his second coaching year with the Bruins, will be assisted again by Pat Brisson, Mike Kelly, Bud Hirshfeld, and Ron Harris, along with a couple of new goalie coaches.

Contributing to the strength of the Bruin squad, which, after finishing 7-13 and fifth in season play last year, lost to Cal State Fullerton in the finals of the league championship, is sophomore David Lippman, who was on the Marina Cities Hockey Team for five years, and senior Eric Hithe, who played for top-ranked Boston College for a couple years. Aerospace grad student Kurt Zimmerman, who hails from the University of Wisconsin's JV team, and two staffers, John Prenner, a research assistant in the Jules Stein Institute, and Mike Braun, a UCPD officer, also figure to contribute.

DAN MacMEDAN/Daily Bruin

Marty Bennett returns to lead the UCLA ice hockey team.

Six new players are included on the Division II roster as well, and a total of five goalies, versus last year's two, will be competing to tend the cage.

At the end of September the coach led a three-day training camp emphasizing the fundamentals and conditioning, giving White and his assistants a chance to evaluate and assess each player's potential. Furthermore, during the Tuesday morning practices at Culver City Ice Rink, the coaches have been working specifically on quickness and execution of a good transitional game, enabling the players to react with speed to given situations.

"The attitude seems to be right on the team, and after finishing a year with them I feel that they've improved their skills by 40-50 percent," noted Coach White. "It's a big step for us to be able to have enough guys to have two teams, and hopefully we should get off to a good strong start."

The toughest competition this year is expected to come from the three-time defending league champs, Cal State Fullerton, which consistently houses the top league scorers, and edged UCLA out of a league title last year, 4-2. But the Titans have lost two key elements that may hamper the team this year - their coach Ron Furlong, who had established a strong presence not only on the team but within the league as well, and their home ice rink too, which has been torn down with plans to replace it with a shopping mall. This means all of Fullerton's games will be on the road, thus lacking the fan support that has always been a strong factor at home games. Filling in Furlong's shoes is Barry Sheare, a former CSUF player with not much experience in coaching.

Also, CSUF's and the league's top scorer last season, Tom Imperato, is stuck in a leg cast with torn ligaments, and is expected out of play until December. These variables may put the league title closer within the reach of UCLA, ASU or CSUN, which also will be a strong contender this year.

Northridge, however, also has had to cope with major losses this season, namely that of Rob Glanz and Sean Duffy, two veteran high scorers who have continuously posed a threat to the Bruins.

On the other hand, the UCLA team appears stronger in numbers, quality of play, and teamwork ability than ever before. The level of enthusiasm and participation will undoubtedly serve to benefit the squad which surprised everyone by nearly taking away the title from CSUF last spring.

The team will show the level of its talent against CSUN at 2:15 p.m. Friday afternoon at the Culver City Ice Arena before embarking on its first road trip of the season to ASU this weekend. All home games are free and spectators are welcomed by the players.

UCLA football climbs to the top of the heap pointed out. Everybody wants to knock you down.

"There is going to be a real focus on beating UCLA, although I always think that teams get up for us," Donahue said. "When you're on or near the top, teams get cranked up. I know Cal was cranked up. For the first time in 30 years they had a Homecoming rally at Cal.

"The players will be excited, and I want them to be. But I also want to keep them on an even keel and work as hard as ever. I'm proud of my team, and I'm going to give them a hand. On the other hand, after about three or four minutes of that, it's time for practice and a couple of hours of game films in preparation for Arizona."

When asked if this really was the best team in the nation, Donahue replied, "I really don't think the polls matter until the ninth, tenth and eleventh week of the season."

This is the first time in Terry Donahue's career that one of his teams has reached the top spot in the national polls. Never as a player, assistant coach or head coach has Donahue been able to say his team was No. 1.

In 1980, UCLA was No. 2 in the country and was heading onto the field against the Arizona Wildcats when then-top-ranked Alabama lost to Mississippi.

That team, which included UCLA greats Tom Ramsey, Kenny Easley and Freeman McNeil, lost to the Wildcats that night in Tucson, and with that any hope of being the nation's top-ranked team.

In 1967, the Beban-led Bruins went 7-0-1 and earned the top spot in the nation before losing to No. 2 USC when Trojan tailback O.J. Simpson won the game on a legendary 67-yard run late in the game, 21-20.

In 1966, Donahue's senior year under head coach Tommy Prothro, the Bruins had run their record to 7-0 before losing in Seattle to Washington, 16-3.

So, in truth, being No. 1 doesn't really mean anything until January—but Donahue did see a light at the end of the long season.

"We control our own destiny now," he said. "We know that from here on out, if we continue to win, we're No. 1. It's as simple as that."

The coach of the nation's newest No. 1 team had a lot of questions answered in the victory over Cal—but freely admits that there's a long road ahead.

For Donahue, it's business as usual

At luncheon, focuses on tailbacks and injuries

"It's not time for Christmas, yet," said Terry Donahue when asked about his football team.

And Donahue knows that the month of December, when the end of the football season rolls around, is the time of year when national rankings take on true meaning. But right now he is more worried about the present—and we're not talking about the ones that are looking to be opened.

The Bruins are 6-0 for the first time since the 1980 season (3-0 in Pac-10 conference play), and are the nation's new No. 1 team. At his weekly press luncheon Monday, Donahue tried to talk as much as he could about the business at hand, even though discussion of the anticipated rankings could not be avoided.

Speaking of Saturday's win over Cal, Donahue commented that he was "particularly delighted" with the victory for several reasons, namely:

"First, it's hard to beat anybody 17 times in a row in anything. The fact that we've been able to dominate the series with Cal is a significant accomplishment.

"I thought Troy Aikman was the key to our victory," Donahue continued. "He played a wonderful game. Any time you can call 35 passes and not have an interception that's really something. It was his best game of the season, and one of the best in his career."

Finally, Donahue said that he felt it was a good win for the Bruins because, "Cal gave us their best shot. They are a good team, they're well coached, sound offensively

Bentsen campaigns at Ackerman forum

Candidate appears to praise proposed service program

By May Wong, Staff Writer

Vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen praised the Democratic Party and a new national service program proposal before a full house in Ackerman Grand Ballroom yesterday.

The Democratic Leadership Council (DLC) forum, titled "Pay Back Student Loans Via Community Service," discussed a program designed to promote incentives for civil service by monetary rewards and educational benefits.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., said the Democratic Leadership Council was "not here to support any particular campaign . . ."

But Bentsen did begin campaigning.

"Governor Dukakis and I plan to work with the DLC in putting this (program) into being so that we can have a new group of Americans with pride in the country and belief in citizenship that will allow America to reach for new frontiers and build better communities," said Bentsen.

While Bentsen praised the DLC for endorsing the importance of civil service, he attacked the Republican proposal for "youth engaged service."

"They thought we wouldn't remember . . . what they've done over the past eight years," said Bentsen, referring to how Republicans vetoed legislation on establishing a youth conservation core, and how the party opposed major community service legislation.

"(National service) is not a new idea but it's an idea whose time has come," Nunn said.

The proposed program, "Citizen's Corps," sets a new definition for patriotism, said Nunn. "Patriotism includes but is not limited to a ritual performance by our citizens. Patriotism is not simply pledging allegiance to our flag — patriotism includes serving our fellow citizens. That's what this program is all about."

Modeled after the successful G.I. Bill, the program is designed to provide educational benefits to those who volunteer their time for civil service. The G.I. Bill, which gives educational benefits to those who have served the U.S., was created after World War II.

The program, if approved, will allow for service ranging from a minimum of two weekends per month to full-time work over a period of one or two years. But all service will be compensated with money towards paying back student loans or for other educational benefits.

One of the goals of the "Citizen's Corps" is "to awaken young people to a new sense of civic obligation," said Nunn. He is hoping that the young people's example will spread to America's adult population as well.

Another goal is "to mobilize our young people who have so much energy and talent and enthusiasm, and to put those young

Bentsen hopeful despite polls

Calls surveys 'volatile,' predicts Dukakis win

By Jacki McKimmy, Contributor

Vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen acknowledged that he and Gov. Michael Dukakis are trailing behind Republicans, in a private meeting with local precinct leaders yesterday.

Bentsen met with Democratic staff members immediately following a forum on "Paying Back Student Loans Via Community Service," held yesterday in Ackerman Grand Ballroom.

Despite opinion polls indicating that George Bush leads the race for president, Bentsen said "I've seen how wrong (opinion) polls can be." He encouraged the campaign staff by saying that the polls are "very volatile."

The senator stressed the need for staff members to continue their enthusiasm throughout the race, as he reflected on other close presidential campaigns that were victorious for Democrats.

He reminded the group that John F. Kennedy trailed Richard Nixon throughout the 1960 campaign but was elected to the presidency by less than one vote per precinct. He also reflected on the perserverance of Harry Truman, who was expected to lose the presidential race to his opponent, George Dewey.

"I remember (President) Harry Truman, holding the front page of the Chicago Daily with the headline 'Dewey Wins,' with a big wide grin on his face," said Bentsen.

The Democrats, he said, will win California and the national election "in the grass roots and the trenches." They will win, he said, by getting those who do not usually vote out to the polls.

After his brief address, the vice presidential candidate shook hands with supporters while precinct leaders shouted "We're going to win this one!"

NOMMO enters its 20th year

But limited resources, staff impair production

Editor's note: This is the last story in a three-part series commemorating the 20th anniversary of UCLA's black/African newsmagazine, NOMMO.

By Shodja Kargar
Contributor

It's 6:47 p.m. Tuesday evening and Guy Leemhuis is working in the NOMMO office as staff members are going in and out of the room. NOMMO, UCLA's black/African newsmagazine, is Swahili for "Power of the Word" and its staff members are doing everything in their power to publish this year's first issue for Oct. 24.

As the paper enters its 20th year of publication, the realities of putting out a newspaper in the face of limited resources and declining financial support from registration fees place additional strain on NOMMO's small but ambitious staff.

"Currently, the assistant business manager and I are the sales staff," says Leemhuis, NOMMO's Business Manager. Ideally, Leemhuis should be supervising a sales staff of three or more people.

As business manager, Leemhuis, a 20-year-old political science major, handles the paper's payroll and advertising. Advertising was not a concern of the first NOMMO staff 20 years ago, but times have changed.

"With the subsidy cuts we are on the road where we cannot exist without advertising," says Leemhuis. The subsidy from the ASUCLA Communications Board currently pays for utility costs only, but an additional $3,000 to $4,000 is needed for advertising to publish each issue, according to Leemhuis.

Eliciting advertising is a bit more complex than normal for NOMMO. "We don't accept alcohol or cigarette ads because we feel there's been a bombardment of alcohol and cigarette advertising in the black community," says Leemhuis.

NOMMO also does not accept any advertisements from companies like Coca-Cola which have business dealings with South Africa. Campus

Expert says last year's crash good for economy

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

While some stock brokers are still licking their wounds from the stock market crash that occurred one year ago today, one economist holds that "Black Monday" was the best thing that could have happened to our economy.

Larry Kimball, director of the UCLA Business Forecasting Project, discussed the economic outlook for California and the nation at an Oct. 14 luncheon meeting of the Bay Area members of the UCLA Chancellor's Associates.

In his discussion, the professor of business economics at UCLA's Anderson Graduate School of Management argued that the crash of Oct. 19, 1987 slowed down what was then an "overheated" economy.

"The economy was overheated in the third quarter of 1987, and the crash really cooled things down. We were spending too much, we were growing too fast and we were going to start getting inflationary," Kimball said.

"If you could have waved a magic wand and given the economy what it needed, it would have been a slow down to catch our breath and then move on to a good year," Kimball said.

Before the crash, Kimball said he thought that it would have taken a recession of at least three or four months to slow down the economy, instead of just one "Black Monday."

He explained that when the economy is "going too fast" the country runs out of capacity, prices start rising and the Federal Reserve "slams on the brakes." The result is rising interest rates, a slump in the housing industry, and a recession, according to Kimball.

However, Kimball noted that Group unites campus gays

GALA goal: social, political acceptance

Editor's Note: UCLA's 12 special interest groups provide students with abundant opportunities to explore, experiment and share their experiences with others. This is the first in an occasional series of profiles featuring each special interest group and its contributions to the UCLA community.

By Thanh Nhan

When diversity on campus is discussed, ethnicity and religious affiliation are two factors that come to mind. The Gay and Lesbian Association presents yet another dimension of diversity that transcends even racial and ethnic boundaries.

Founded in 1969, GALA seeks to create a more positive social and political environment for gay and lesbian students, faculty and graduates. By providing the gay and lesbian community with a variety of social and educational opportunities, GALA attests to its motto: "We are here because you are."

Much of GALA's past was devoted to helping gays and lesbians fight the effects of homophobia. In 1985, GALA fought for the inclusion of sexual orientation in the University of California's anti-discrimination policy.

Today, GALA continues to help gays and lesbians by providing a variety of opportunities and services. Community service is a high priority for the organization, co-chair Gary Murakami said, citing community education about AIDS and the group's annual Gay and Lesbian Awareness Week as examples.

Special Interest Groups:

'We are here because you are.'

— GALA motto

"We want gays and lesbians to use us as a resource for social, political and educational opportunity," said Murakami.

GALA keeps no roster of its members because of the possible stigma that may be attached. According to Murakami, approximately 300 people are on GALA's mailing list. All meetings are open to the straight and gay communities of UCLA.

Like other special interest groups, GALA seeks to promote understanding and break the stereotypes that plague the organization.

"Discrimination is discrimination and prejudice is prejudice. Whatever minority group you belong to you are discriminated because people don't understand or want to accept," said Murakami.

Gays and lesbians face many of the same problems as racial minorities, according to Murakami. "Whether you are gay or lesbian, black or white, we are the same. We may have different needs but we are one race . . . we all hurt, we all cry. We all go throughout the same emotions . . . We are humanity," he said.

Being discriminated against because you are gay is just as difficult as experiencing prejudice because you are Asian, he said.

GALA is an annual participant in Homecoming and Mardi Gras and also sponsors two dances per quarter. In addition, GALA often participates in gay and lesbian rights' rallies and parades such as the Christopher Street West parade.

GALA sponsors OUT (Opening Up Together) Counseling, a free support service for those who are having trouble "coming out" — being open and comfortable about one's sexuality. OUT can be reached at the GALA office after 7 p.m. at 825-8053.

Other services offered by GALA are the lesbian social hour, men's rap group, undergraduate social hour, graduate social hour and the residence hall rap group.

Psychologist gives reasons, solutions for student stress

By M. Radevich, Staff Writer

Coffee cup in one hand, highlighter in the other, and a bottle of Pepto Bismol on standby, John tensed up in front of his physics book.

"I gotta get an A in this class," he said between grinding teeth. "If I don't get an A I won't be accepted to graduate school. And if I'm not accepted to graduate school, I'll never get a job. And if . . . "

By the time he finished agonizing, John went from being a B plus student to a jobless vagrant begging for his next meal.

"When you're stressed, you often blow things out of proportion," said psychologist Robert Kriegel. "You unconsciously react to pressures as if they are life and death situations. That way you tense up even more. Not only do you suffer from stress but you're also not at your peak performance level."

Kriegel, an authority on human performance and dealing with stress, will give a free seminar tonight on how to perform under pressure instead of buckling. His talk, to be held at 7 p.m. at USC's Hoffman Hall in the Edison Auditorium, is part of a national tour aimed at teaching students to reduce pressures in life.

"Anxiety over exams, roommates, career decisions, strained relationships, job interviews can lead to stress in college students which in turn leads to pain," Kriegel explained. "There is a mind-body relationship. You think to yourself, 'Oh no, I gotta get this done,' and you start tensing up and you get a headache."

Kriegel believes that one of the leading causes of stress is the "gotta" attitude. When a student has to study for a final, write a paper, and still go out to dinner with the parents, the most common response is to "jam on the gas pedal" and try to speed everything up, he explained.

"You start thinking 'I gotta study, I gotta write, I gotta get ready.' The key word here is 'gotta,'" Kriegel continued. "When you try to work faster because you gotta get everything done, you can't concentrate clearly."

Kriegel said that the best method to cope with this type of "desperation thinking" is to do a "reality check" and ask yourself, "What is the worst thing that can happen to me if I don't get it done?" "The worst that can happen is never as bad as what we imagined," he said.

French economist receives Nobel prize

By Larry Gerber
Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Maurice Allais, a prolific theorist whose ideas on balancing supply and demand helped rebuild the French economy after World War II, won the Nobel Prize for economics Tuesday.

Allais, a Paris shopkeeper's son, became mentor to a generation of economists. He developed formulas to enable large enterprises, particularly public ones, to keep an economy in balance by regulating prices and allocating their resources.

After the award was announced, the 77-year-old economist said he had given up hope of ever winning the prize, which was established 20 years ago. "I've been mentioned so many times before, I just didn't think I would get it," he said from his apartment in a Paris suburb.

The poverty and unemployment Allais saw in the United States, on a visit during the Great Depression of the 1930s, turned him to economics from the engineering career for which he had trained.

"He is a giant in economic theoretic analysis," said Assar Lindbeck, who heads the committee of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences that awards the Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science.

According to the citation, Allais was honored "for his pioneering contributions to the theory of markets and efficient utilization of resources."

This year's prizes are worth about $390,000.

Allais did his major work in Nazi-occupied France during the war. He published "In Search of an Economic Discipline" in 1943 and "Economy and Interest" in 1947.

Of his change in careers, the laureate said Tuesday: "My motivation when I was young was an idea of being able to improve the conditions of life, to try to find a remedy to many of the problems facing the world. That's what led me into economics. I saw it as a way of helping people."

South Korea calls for summit

Leader seeks anti-force pact with North

By Peter James Spielmann
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — President Roh Tae-woo of South Korea called Tuesday for a summit meeting with North Korean's president to sign a non-aggression pact and said his country "will never use force first against the North."

In the first address by a Korean leader to the General Assembly, Roh said such a summit should "resolve all the problems raised by either or both sides with regard to disarmament, arms control and other military matters."

North Korea has said it only would accept a summit meeting after 42,000 U.S. troops pull out of the South.

Roh also proposed the two Koreas meet with United States, the Soviet Union, China and Japan to lay the groundwork for peace, prosperity and security in Northeast Asia.

Seoul's allies, including the United States, should "contribute to the progress and opening of North Korea by engaging Pyongyang in expanding relations," the president told the 159-member world body.

Roh also called for a Korean trade and cultural center on the 38th Parallel dividing North and South, where divided families could visit in a "city of peace."

Western diplomats hailed Roh's speech, which drew prolonged applause, but there was no immediate comment from North Korea, the Soviet

Israeli troops kill 2 Palestinians

By Eileen Alt Powell

JERUSALEM — Israeli troops firing plastic bullets killed two Palestinians — a teen-ager and a 5-year-old boy — and wounded a U.S. journalist during clashes Tuesday in the occupied West Bank, Arab hospital officials said.

An army spokesman confirmed the deaths and said five people had plastic bullet wounds, including American photographer Neal Cassidy — the first foreign journalist shot in the 10-month Palestinian uprising over Israeli rule in the occupied lands.

Hospital officials said six people were wounded.

The 5-year-old boy died after he was hit with plastic bullets in the chest, stomach and left hand as he played in a schoolyard near his home, according to officials at Al Ittihad Hospital.

The child, identified as Deyaa Fayez, was shot when Israeli soldiers opened fire on a nearby group of stone-throwing Palestinians, Arab reporters said. The reporters and hospital officials spoke on condition of anonymity.

Hospital officials identified the second victim as Khaled Tbaileh, 14, of Nablus. Officials at St. John Hospital said he was shot in the chest with a plastic bullet in a second clash in Nablus, the West Bank's largest city.

The deaths raised to 301 the number of Palestinians killed since Arabs launched the uprising Dec. 8. Six Israelis also have died.

Israel has occupied the territories since the 1967 Middle East war.

Investors cautious a year after crash

By Rich Cartiere, Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The bears have taken over at the Pacific Stock Exchange in the year since the massive market crash known as "Black Monday."

"To put it simply, everybody — and that includes the people that run this floor — is as conservative as they can stand to be," said investor Stephen Hansen on the floor of the exchange.

"Everyone's afraid of possible aftershocks," from the stunning crash last Oct. 19, when the Dow Jones industrial average plummeted 508 points, said the Seattle resident. Hansen suffered a six-figure paper loss.

Like many of the new bears, Hansen has switched invest-no one would ask for another crash because it is too dangerous to the financial markets, but "this crash occurred with almost perfect timing."

In his predictions of the economic future, Kimball forecasted that the price of houses in the United States and especially California will rise dramatically, but that interest rates will decline.

Kimball claims that interests rates must become lower because if the rate of increase in the last decade continued, it would take nearly 100 percent of an average wage earner's salary to pay just the interest on a mortgage.

Calling for a sharp cut on American dependence on foreign investment, he warned that such a dependence will spell economic disaster in the future.

Kimball holds that the interest payments made to foreign investors turn over American revenue to other countries.

In attendance at the meeting held in San Francisco were approximately eighty guests, ranging from Chancellor Associates, UCLA alumni who live in the bay area, and donors who have given to UCLA organizations other than the Chancellor Associate Fund.

IRS could collect more business tax dollars, report says

By David Pace, Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service could collect billions of dollars more a year by using the same aggressive enforcement tactics against businesses that it uses against individual taxpayers, a congressional report says.

The report by the Government Operations subcommittee on commerce, consumer and monetary affairs comes amid a presidential campaign in which Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis has made more aggressive collection of unpaid taxes a cornerstone of his economic proposals.

The subcommittee report, released Monday, says the IRS should develop a program to match "information returns" showing interest and dividend income paid to businesses with the actual tax returns filed by each company.

The report estimated that between $3.2 billion and $8 billion a year in taxes on interest and dividends earned by businesses is never collected because the income is not reported to the IRS.

The IRS for years has been using its computers to compare information returns listing interest and dividend payments to individuals with the income tax returns filed by the individuals. The program produced $2.35 billion in additional tax revenue from individuals in fiscal 1985.

Banks and corporations are not required to file such information returns, but the House report said the IRS still received 26 million such returns in 1985, showing income payments to 5 million businesses totaling $987 billion.

Rep. Doug Barnard, D-Ga., chairman of the subcommittee, has introduced legislation to mandate the filing of information returns by businesses. He said the IRS hasn't even been using the corporate returns it has been receiving without such a requirement.

"By casting these information returns aside, IRS is not only missing the chance to assess many billions of dollars of unreported business tax liabilities but has created a double standard of enforcement that is more lenient by far toward businesses than individuals," Barnard said.

IRS spokesman Frank Keith said Monday the agency has not seen the House report and will not comment until agency officials review it.

But at a hearing before Barnard's subcommittee last year, IRS Commissioner Lawrence B. Gibbs said the additional tax revenue that would be generated by a document matching program for corporations would not justify the administrative costs.

Gibbs said those costs would be much higher than for the document matching program for individuals because corporations use different fiscal years, varying accounting methods and different names.

The House report said the problems cited by Gibbs all "pertain to the way income is reported" to the IRS.

Gibbs promised the subcommittee last year that the IRS would begin using document matching to verify income reported on tax returns from single-owner businesses and would start a multiyear study to determine the extent of business under-reporting of interest and dividend income.

Federal panel urges universal access to prenatal care

By Jerry Estill
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal panel called Tuesday for universal access to prenatal care by American women as a way to reduce the number of babies born diseased and handicapped — and save taxpayer dollars in the process.

"The most basic problem is that our nation has failed to give adequate priority to the principle that all pregnant women — not only the affluent — should receive prenatal, delivery and postpartum services," said Joyce C. Lashof, chairwoman of the Institute of Medicine study committee.

The panel's two-year survey started out trying to determine what type of outreach programs would be most effective in providing pregnant women with prenatal care.

But it soon concluded that the problem ran deeper than women not being aware of services available to them.

"Our central conclusion is that outreach efforts are no match for the pervasive barriers faced by low-income women in trying to secure adequate prenatal and maternity-care services," Lashof said at a news conference where the 254-page report was issued.

"As is so often the case, the principal barrier is money," said Lashof, who is dean of the School of Public Health at the University of California-Berkeley.

The report said about 26 percent of women of child-bearing age have no insurance — public or private — to cover maternity care and that two-thirds of these, or about 9.5 million women, have no health insurance at all.

In many ways, the panelists concluded, money itself is not as much of a problem as lack of will to make a national commitment to tackle the problem in a comprehensive way.

Although there would be an initial investment of new funds to expand Medicaid to cover more pregnant women, for

Measure to give governor power to block paroles

By Jennifer Kerr
Associated Press

Propositions '88

SACRAMENTO — In 1967, William Archie Fain drove along a Stanislaus County road, following a car containing three teen-agers. That road ultimately led to Proposition 89 on the November ballot, which would give governors the power to block paroles of convicted murderers.

It was Fain's highly publicized case that provided the impetus for Gov. George Deukmejian, who was told by the Supreme Court he could not stop Fain's parole, to propose the constitutional amendment and the Legislature to pass it.

"Proposition 89 will not politicize the parole process, but it will provide an extra measure of safety to local citizens by giving the governor the authority to block the parole of criminals who still pose a significant threat to society," say Deukmejian and Sen. Daniel Boatwright in their ballot arguments.

"Proposition 89 will politicize decisions about whether to grant or deny parole," said an opponent, the Rev. Paul Comiskey of the Prisoners Rights Union of Marin County. "Unpopular persons will be denied parole dates because governors will sacrifice the interests of justice for votes. The criminal justice system will appear even more hypocritical than it is at present."

Proposition 89 would give the governor 30 days to review any parole action by the Board of Prison Terms and the Youthful Offender Parole Board and allow the governor to affirm, modify or reverse any such decision.

The measure would affect only prisoners sentenced to life with possibility of parole for murder convictions. The nine-member Board of Prison Terms sets parole dates for adults so convicted and minors 16 or older who are tried as adults. The seven-member Youthful Offender Parole Board sets parole dates for other minors who commit murder and are confined with the Youth Authority. The members of both boards are appointed by the governor.

All life sentences have minimum parole dates and most lifers are not considered by the Board of Prison Terms until they have been in prison 15 to 25 years. The board holds the first hearing to consider parole about one year before the prisoner's minimum parole date, as established by the sentence. The boards are required, when deciding whether to release a prisoner, to consider the gravity of the current or past offenses, public safety, statements of the victim and public, the prisoner's social, mental and criminal history, the prisoner's record in prison and conditions of release.

In 1986-87, the Board of Prison Terms reviewed 577 inmates and granted parole to 38. The previous year, the board reviewed 798 cases and granted parole to 61. The board says its parole denial rate has increased from 54 percent in 1979 to 92 percent in 1987.

The Legislature in 1984 passed a law that authorizes the governor to request a review of any parole release decision 90 days in advance of the scheduled release date. Deukmejian has not yet done this.

Proposition 89:

Would allow the governor to reverse parole board decisions for murderers, a measure which stems from the highly publicized William Archie Fain murder case.

Flash electrical fire damages Venus probe

By Howard Benedict
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A flash electrical fire caused minor damage to the $216 million Magellan spacecraft, built for California's Jet Propulsion Laboratory and slated for launch toward Venus from a space shuttle next April, NASA said Tuesday.

The fire broke out about 11 p.m. Monday when workers connected electrical cables to run routine power system checks in the spacecraft's forward equipment module.

"A preliminary review shows . . . a circuit was shorted, causing an overheated battery," a space agency statement said. "Within one minute the fire was extinguished. No personal injuries resulted."

John Conway, director of payloads at the Kennedy Space Center, said the fire burned the battery, wire harnesses and some insulation blankets and caused some soot damage. He said an initial assessment indicated the damage was minor and he estimated it would take only a few days for cleanup and replacement of parts.

Because an electrical short was involved, engineers were checking to make certain no damage was done to electrical components throughout the spacecraft.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration named an investigation review board to assess the cause and the extent of damage.

The 21-foot-tall planetary probe, which will weigh 7,800 pounds when fully assembled, was being worked on in a spacecraft assembly building at the time of the fire.

The Magellan spacecraft was delivered here Oct. 8 from the Martin Marietta facility in Denver, where it was built. It is scheduled for launching April 28 aboard the shuttle Atlantis. NASA said the launch date is not expected to change because of the fire.

NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, in Pasadena, Calif., is in charge of the Magellan mission to Venus.

Atlantis' astronaut crew is to release the spacecraft from the cargo bay to start it on a 446-day trip to Venus. While Magellan orbits the planet, its advanced radar will peer through the constant clouds and map the surface.

Before that mission, Atlantis

Ex-governor Brown to vie for Democratic chair

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Former Gov. Jerry Brown says he has rented an apartment in San Francisco's Pacific Heights district and registered as a voter there in order to run next year for chairman of the California Democratic Party.

By law, the chairmanship of the state party alternates between Northern and Southern California, and it is Northern California's turn in 1989 to have the chairman.

"I have established a residence in San Francisco . . . in order to be eligible to run (for party chairman)," Brown said in a telephone interview Tuesday.

He added that returning to San Francisco "is something I've been thinking about anyway, and this was just the catalyst to do it now."

The 50-year-old Brown, governor from 1975 through 1982, is a native of San Francisco, but he has made his home in Los Angeles for the past 20 years.

Brown said he has the endorsements for party chairman of the county chairmen of Los Angeles, Orange, San Diego, Sacramento and several other counties and that his election to the unpaid party post "looks pretty good from all I can tell."

Steve Westly, a Menlo Park investment banker and current party vice chairman, and Neil Eisenberg, a San Francisco attorney and general counsel of the state party, are also seeking the chairmanship.

Proposal seeks to end student name-calling

The Associated Press

Foul-mouthed students will be punished for unsavory utterances or offending epithets scrawled on lockers under a policy designed to stifle an outbreak of schoolyard name-calling.

The measure, proposed by board member Jackie Goldberg, requires schools to develop discipline plans for those who utter slurs against any person on the basis of race, religion, sex, sexual orientation, disabilities, immigration status or political belief.

A companion measure also approved unanimously Monday by the Board of Education requires each school to decide how to discipline students for acts of physical violence that stem from hatred or bigotry.

"I consider words that are slurs against who a person is to be the highest form of obscenity," Ms. Goldberg said. "We cannot change hearts . . . cannot erase prejudices. But we can change overt behavior."

Goldberg said she hopes the measures will help reverse a noticeable increase in the use of slurs on playgrounds and locker graffiti. She attributed the increase to a lapse in sensitivity since the 1960s.

The plan does not specify which words now are banned from district schools and offices. Those details are delegated to individual school committees made up of administrators, teachers and students.

"My hope," Ms. Goldberg said, "is that in making this a matter of schoolwide discussion, we're going to raise consciousness about the hazards of using these words freely."

All the Banks in Today's Financial Services Expo are "Clean".
ASUCLA only banks with "clean banks"— that is, banks with no ties or investments in South Africa. We're pleased that so many banks qualify under the banking policy which ASUCLA's Board of Control adopted in December 1980. That means UCLA students get a real choice, and a choice that reflects our concerns about important issues such as U.S. ties to apartheid.
The Banking Policy is only one of the socially responsible decisions made by ASUCLA's Board of Control. Students, faculty, administration and alumni are represented on the Board, and we are always interested in community input. You can write the Board of Control at 332 Kerckhoff Hall, Campus Mail Code 164006.

AIDS initiative backer calls for bank boycott

The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — Initiative crusader Paul Gann is advocating a boycott of Wells Fargo Bank because the bank contributed $5,000 to the anti-Proposition 102 campaign.

"They're (the bank) afraid they'll be boycotted by the gay community," Gann said at a capitol news conference Tuesday.

A spokeswoman for Wells Fargo said the boycott would probably not be effective and the bank and other corporations are opposing the AIDS-related measure because they do not like it, not because of any threatened gay boycott.

Proposition 102, backed by Gann and Rep. William Dannemeyer (R-Fullerton), would require doctors, blood banks and anyone else to report to a local health officer within 48 hours anyone who tests positive for the acquired immune deficiency syndrome antibody. Local health officers would have to notify the test subject's spouse, sexual partners and others who might have had contacts.

Under current state law, test results are confidential, and other people cannot be notified without the written consent of the test subject.

Gann, who was infected with AIDS by a blood transfusion in 1982, said the pro-102 committee will be sending a mailing to 55,000 supporters next week, urging them to boycott Wells Fargo.

Gann said other boycotts may follow against corporate contributors to the anti-102 campaign, including Levi Strauss.

Gann could provide no proof that gay groups have threatened to boycott any firms that do not oppose 102. He said he had been "told by others that they were told they would be boycotted."

Kim Kellogg, news bureau manager for Wells Fargo headquarters in San Francisco, said there was no threatened boycott by gay groups.

She said "most of the corporate community is in opposition to 102."

She said employers are concerned because Proposition 102 contains no preventive education and could require corporate counseling programs to report to health officers information told in confidence by employees. She said Proposition 102 also has the potential of creating employment discrimination.

"We don't think it's (the Gann boycott) going to be all that effective," she said. Activists groups have proposed boycotts against the bank in the past, and there has been little impact, she said.

STOCKS: Playing it safe

ment strategy so that he has about half of his personal investments in cash and equities. Last year, it was 90 percent stocks.

Because of reactions like those from Hansen, the last 12 months have been a scary time for West Coast brokerage firms. More than a few are dripping red ink.

"Basically, the most active investors, and those are people you really make your money on, are all on the sidelines, with their fingers in the air wet, trying to get a feeling for the direction of the wind," said Hugo Quackenbush, senior vice president of San Francisco-based Charles Schwab & Co., the nation's largest discount brokerage house.

Many of last year's record number of active investors entered the bull market near its peak. They left in droves in the middle of the plunge, earning them the somewhat derisively nickname of LIFOs — "Last in, First Out."

Despite the crash, doomsday scenarios did not materialize. The market is sputtering along, moderately higher than where it was last year immediately following Black Monday.

But where it goes, nobody knows.

"There's no great conviction that the market will move up much, but neither is there much conviction that it will drop a lot," said Keith Pinsoneault, director of research and trading at Sutro & Co. in San Francisco.

The numbers that made up the West Coast side of the crash — many brokers euphemistically call it a "major market correction" — tell the story best.

At Schwab, new accounts are down from 300,000 for the first nine months of 1987 to 171,000 through the end of last month. Where Schwab had 2,533 full-time employees last September, there are 263 fewer this September.

"We're in a sandpaper part of the market, where nothing is doing much of anything," said Quackenbush.

Schwab has not yet released third-quarters earnings, but second quarter earnings were off 84 percent while revenues fell 14.5 percent. Volume is down 40 percent from a year ago. Average daily trading last year through September was 17,406; now it's 10,500.

Hedging their future, and thereby reducing brokerage commissions, Schwab's customers have increased cash and cash-equivalent holdings by 26 percent since last October. The firm's certificates of deposit are up 168 percent.

Like Schwab, other San Francisco Bay area firms say they have weathered the trading slowdown by cutting frills and beefing up services for more traditional investors.

The PSE, which also has a trading floor in Los Angeles, has gone through a major revamp of operations to prevent repeat of the system overload.

The Securities and Exchange Commission issued a stinging report on the PSE in January, saying it "encountered the most problems (of all the exchanges in the nation), losing both orders and trade reports due to a system capacity overload."

The exchange also plans to automate its options trading system and may open a floor in Honolulu.

"We learned a lot about ourselves, in terms of our shortcomings, and we've been able to come out of it as a much stronger type of organization that we were previously," Alexander said.

Care

example, the money would pay a three-fold dividend by producing more healthy babies and thus fewer sick and handicapped individuals to be cared for at public expense. "For every dollar spent on prenatal care for low-income, poorly educated women, about $3 are saved in medical expenses for low-birthweight babies during the first year of life," said Lashof, citing figures from a 1985 Institute of Medicine study.

Indeed, many of the fundamental findings in the new survey track two studies released in recent months by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment and the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality.

Lashof said the major new conclusion of the latest study is that trying to refine outreach programs for women in need of prenatal care is more or less a wasted effort until actual barriers to such care are removed.

A majority of the six panelists at the news conference expressed optimism that the nation will provide proper prenatal care in the near future — in part because multiple studies seem to have demonstrated beyond doubt the sheer cost effectiveness of such programs.

"If anything gets attention, it's dollars and cents," said panelist George M. Ryan. "I just don't think this nation is going to go on paying to take care of handicapped infants when we can prevent the handicaps with proper prenatal care."

Ryan is an obstetrics and gynecology professor at the University of Tennessee medical school in Memphis.

He also said the agency would begin a test program using information returns to detect corporations and partnerships that do not file any income tax returns.

That test program in one district office was so successful, the House report said, that the IRS now has expanded it to nine more districts and could have a document matching program ready by next spring to identify nonfilers among corporations and partnerships nationwide.

has another flight assignment. It is being readied here for a late November launch in which it is to carry a classified Defense Department payload into orbit. A problem with an actuator that controls the left wing flap has delayed for a few days its transfer to a processing facility to an assembly building where it will be joined with its two solid fuel booster rockets and external fuel tank.

A firm launch date will not be set until a flight readiness review scheduled Nov. 9 and 10.

The flight will be the second for the shuttle program since the Challenger explosion in January 1986. Discovery completed a highly successful mission on Oct. 3 and is now being groomed for a February launch.

groups, small businesses and larger black organizations like the NAACP mainly advertise in the paper but a push is being made to branch out to the entertainment industry to get movie ads. Leemhuis also hopes to work with Graduate School of Management's Black MBA club to do a intensive study of their market.

"NOMMO is experiencing a rejuvenation . . . as a viable form of doing good business," says Leemhuis. "The paper is going be more professional looking."

Julie Fuller, NOMMO's editor-in-chief, says a rejuvenation is taking place among all facets of the paper. "We are trying to rejuvenate the paper as the voice of the black students. We want it to be a communicational medium and a tool which is used to enhance black student life on this campus," says Fuller.

Black students feel very alienated on this campus for various reasons, says members of NOMMO. "69.5 percent of black students drop out on this campus, and the majority is not for GPA reasons," says Fuller. She points to other social and environmental factors, such as UCLA's curriculum, which make black students feel that they are not a legitimate part of the campus. "NOMMO's quest is to help fill that void," says Fuller.

NOMMO hopes to accomplish its goals through a variety of means. First, they have started developing a better communicational relationship with students. Fuller and her staff have been talking every day with black students to learn of their needs, interests, and concerns. "I want them to feel that NOMMO is their newspaper so that if any thing happens to them they can feel that it will be reported on," says Fuller.

The paper will also be providing vital information on career and scholarship opportunities for blacks. Fuller also hopes to encourage the students to recognize the journalistic career experience NOMMO can offer. "Students learn to use the Macintosh computers, to write and to communicate effectively," she says. Fuller points to successes of other NOMMO staff members who currently hold jobs in the business and publishing sectors.

Another primary concern is to increase student readership. NOMMO plans more news reports and investigative pieces. Fuller also attributes poor distributing practices as one of the reasons why the paper has been an "invisible entity on campus." New distribution racks are being placed in Campbell Hall, Kerckhoff Hall, URL, and Powell Library to increase the visibility of the paper. "We no longer want the paper to be stacked only on the top shelve of the Bruin kiosks which people do not see," says Fuller.

She also says that NOMMO will be "improving the graphic attractiveness of the paper so that people will want to stop and pick it up."

Stress

"Also ask yourself if you have ever been in this situation before and if you handled it. Chances are you have. Remembering a past success helps boost your confidence, and you deal better with the task at hand," he explained.

The flip side of the "gottas," Kriegel said, is dealing with pressures through procrastination. Kriegel believes that the reason people procrastinate is because the task is too large or too distasteful.

"The best way to get things into action is to do just that — get moving. Pici a part of the job that isn't too long and too hard and do that first. Start with a small step, but that step is a win. Once you get into action and you get confidence from your win, the rest follows. You get down the mountain one curve at a time," he said.

Along with the "gottas" and procrastination, worry is a major precursor to stress, Kriegel said. He added that most worries deal with the question "what if . . ." and concern things over which we have no control.

"The reason worrying is bad is because with most people it is the last step," Kriegel said. "Instead of just worrying, anticipate. Put the events in your control and look fear in the face. What if traffic is heavy? Can you take another route? What if you are late? Visualize how you will react."

Tonight's lecture, sponsored by the University of Southern California's Greek Council and the Makers of Nuprin, is entitled "Women and Stress."

"I talk a lot about principles so men will get just as much out of it," Kriegel said.

Kriegel said he would also look at the stress levels of women, especially working mothers. "No matter what people say, . . . working mothers deal with more pressures than working fathers," he said.

Another topic which will be discussed is what students should do about choosing a career. According to Kriegel, most people choose their career for the wrong reason--money.

A study was done in which 1,500 people were asked why they wanted to go into their chosen career, Kriegel said. Of those surveyed, 83 percent chose careers for the money, while only 17 percent actually enjoyed the field they were going into.

"Twenty years later the same people were interviewed," Kriegel said. "Of the 102 of them who became millionaires, 102 were from the group of 17 percent that were excited about their jobs."

The real reward is enjoying what you're doing and then you naturally do it better. The external rewards follow. If your main goal is buying that new BMW, you may be happy to finally buy it, but it won't make driving to a job you don't like any easier.

While writing his book "The C Zone: Peak Performance Under Pressure," Kriegel had his own bouts with procrastination, worrying, and the deadline gottas, he said. Many of his lectures are derived from past experience as well as research.

people's talents to work for the social needs of our nation.''

The need for civic service, Nunn continued, emerges in the areas of illiteracy, daycare, national parks, and care for the elderly.

''There is no shortage of unmet social needs in America,'' Nunn said.

Nunn cited upward mobility as a third goal of the program.

Noting the $640,000 difference over a lifetime between the salaries of a high school graduate versus a college graduate, Nunn stressed the importance of a college education.

In addition, Nunn emphasized the need to reverse the trend of decreasing minority college enrollment.

Northwestern University Professor Charles Moskos, whom Nunn called the world's leading military sociologist, spoke of two principles behind voluntary service at the local, state and national levels.

''There must ultimately be a linkage between federal student aid and some form of military service,'' said Moskos, who received his doctorate degree at UCLA.

Defining a ''citizen's soldier,'' Moskos said that military and civil service, while not equal ''are cut out of the same civic cloth.''

Another panelist, Kathleen Kennedy Townsend of Maryland, spoke of the successful volunteer efforts of high school students in her own state.

''The best things things in life are far better than money,'' she said.

Townsend added that the best habits to instill in children are a sense of caring, community and courage.

''We think you should get the education that you need . . . not education that you can afford,'' Sen. Barbara Mikulski (D-Md.) told the audience.

Calif., was hit in the right leg while photographing a demonstration in the Nablus market area.

The army spokesman had no details on the child's death but said soldiers opened fire in the market after demonstrators threw stones and bottles.

The spokesman, who cannot be identified under military regulations, said Cassidy was close to the rioters and ''endangered himself'' by being in the area, which was closed to outsiders under military orders.

Cassidy was covering the Nablus protest for Frontline, a biweekly newspaper published in Oakland. He also works for Impact Visuals, a photo agency in New York.

Cassidy plans to file a formal complaint with the U.S. Consulate after his return to Jerusalem, Ms. Bennis said.

Also Tuesday, the Supreme Court barred U.S.-born Rabbi Meir Kahane from running in the Nov. 1 election, saying his anti-Arab Kach movement is racist. Kahane told reporters that he was urging backers to boycott the vote.

The court also ruled the Progressive List for Peace, which calls for a Palestinian state alongside Israel, could compete in the elections. The right-wing Likud bloc had demanded the party's ouster for allegedly seeking to destroy Israel's Jewish character.

Union or China.

Ambassador Pak Gil Yon of North Korea was present in the assembly chamber, but left without speaking to reporters.

In Pyongyang, President Kim Il Sung accused South Korea and the United States on Tuesday of ''maneuvering'' to perpetuate the division of the Korean Peninsula, the official Korean Central News Agency said.

The agency, monitored in Tokyo, said Kim spoke at a banquet several hours before Roh's U.N. speech. Kim again urged peace and the removal of U.S. troops.

Roh, in his speech, said improved relations and trust between the two Koreas could ultimately lead to the reunification of the peninsula, divided since World War II.

''Even before a non-aggression declaration is made with the Northern side, the Republic of Korea will never use force first against the North,'' Roh said.

''We must do everything possible to hasten the coming of the springtime for peace and reconciliation on the Korean Peninsula,'' he said.

U.S. Ambassador Vernon A. Walters, the permanent U.N. representative, praised the speech as ''one of the most historic and statesman-like speeches I have heard in this hall.''

Japanese Ambassador Hideo Kagami said ''we hope very much that today's speech will contribute to dialogue, reduction of tensions and reconciliation.''

On Wednesday, North Korea's deputy foreign minister, Kang Sok Ju, will address the world body.

The appearance of the South Korean president and North Korean deputy foreign minister is the result of a compromise. The United States, Japan, Canada and other nations proposed last summer that South Korea should speak on the 40th anniversary of its 1948 founding.

China, the Soviet Union and other socialist nations opposed the idea, saying a speech to observe one national day only would fan tensions since the Korean Peninsula was divided.

It later was decided both sides would speak separately on the question of reconciliation and dialogue.

The two Koreas hold U.N. non-voting observer status because their peninsula is divided and they still technically are at war. The 1950-1953 Korean War ended in an armistice and no peace treaty was signed.

On Thursday, Roh meets President Reagan in Washington.

the Ecole Nationale de Mines, said: ''He was the mentor for everyone involved in the economy in postwar France between 1945 and 1968, all the people who were in charge of the biggest enterprises and of the state planning apparatus.''

His theories are expressed in complicated mathematical formulas. They form the basis for sorting out the thousands of independent factors involved in marketing goods and services: How much should a train ticket cost, for example.

Levy said the idea is to keep supply and demand in balance, and according to the Allais theories, ''it's the government's role to organize this fair competition.''

Lifestyles of the unrealistic

Whitney Woodward

There were a lot of freaky people at this barbeque I went to the other night. One of my friend's ex-stepsisters (true Californian family structure) had just moved down from San Francisco and invited us to her housewarming party in Venice. About nine of us sat outside on her cement driveway on office chairs and wicker stools, watching the meat cook.

We each knew about one person, which made for an interesting mix. There was "Lens," who had hurt his back trying to walk on water ("it worked at first") and his friend, "Rainbow," who designed T-shirts for satanic rock bands. Then there was a bee-boppy British hairdresser named "Carrie" who roller-skated everywhere and would come to your house to clip your hair, she said.

The step-sister Laurie, and her platonic male roommate Stacey (who both work at the Oddessey Theater on Santa Monica Blvd.) were our hosts. Two indistinguishable brunette women and an Australian guy — I never did get their names right — rounded out the group. Of the brunette women, one worked in a law office and the other (more pompous) one was a marketing representative for KLOS.

The funny thing about these people is that they were ten to twenty years older than my friend and me, looking like they were straight off Haight Street: 1968 or some commune, and yet they were surprisingly conservative.

Said one of the brunettes: "Sure I was at Berkeley, that was the only place to be at the time. But we weren't plugged into reality back then. We were responsive, not responsible."

I was extremely disappointed that a group of people who conversed enthusiastically about witch doctors, mega-herb doses, channeling and multi-souls could only relate to me by asking those two interminable College Questions: "What's your major?" and "What are you going to do when you graduate?"

When my psychology student friend said that she was thinking about changing her major to philosophy, Lens looked askance, "What can you do with that?" he asked. (This, from a man who lives in Topanga Canyon, carving canes?)

When it came my turn to answer the career question I found myself embarrassed to admit that I want to be a writer, thinking that they would scoff at something so unrealistic. I could see the cynical "Sure, uh huh" glints in their eyes. (Like saying you expect to be a rock star or something.) I think I said "I don't know," which is usually my gut response and cuts short the questioning.

Another way I answer now when people ask me what I'm going to do is to respond airily, "Oh, probably get a job . . ." Which, of course, is one of the unwritten American Commandments.

For awhile there I wanted to buy a hot-dog cart and park it near some beach where I could just sit and watch people. My friends all laughed at me because in my fantasies I was going to call it the "Philosophical Dog" and play different music every day and have a philosophy-of-the-week contest whereby the winner would win a free hot dog and Coke and have their saying posted on my cart for all of the world to see, and off the corner of my cart I was going to hang my college degree (like the useful appendage it is).

Unfortunately, the only place you can do that now around here is Santa Monica Pier, and they are "phasing out" their vending licenses.

My second big plan was to go to Europe directly after graduation, because then I could put off deciding what to do with the rest of my life. (After all, trying to be cultural sounds like a full-time occupation, right?) Afraid that I wouldn't be able to afford to stay abroad for the thirty or so years it would take me to figure my destiny, I thought about working there.

Wrong-O. Even though American students can get permits to work in Europe for up to six months, there are not many jobs to be found. I went to England for two weeks at the end of this summer, and the customs lady in Heathrow grilled me to death because I made the mistake of telling her I was an English major. (I guess she suspected I was a Anglophile-holic and was planning to make it my home.) She made me pull out all of my money and return ticket to prove that, yes, I would be exiting the country.

Most of the jobs available seemed to be secretarial or construction-related, and no one on Fleet Street was interested in talking to me. In desperation I turned to a book called "Unqualified Success," which made me realize how lucky I was to be a college-educated and American. It had had occupations that ranged from butcher to bill poster, farrier to funeral director, pool

Jesse Jackson's speech lacked substantive ideas

Jason Weiss

Hearing that the Reverend Jesse Jackson was planning to speak Friday in Westwood Plaza, I decided that it would be a valuable educational experience to hear him live and in person. So, with a very large crowd of vocal supporters, I listened to the Reverend speak for approximately forty-five minutes on many issues dealing with our nation's problem concerning the homeless, civil rights, and the upcoming presidential election on November 8, to name a few.

Jesse Jackson spoke with great conviction and emotion to the constant roar of hundreds of students, and I am the first to admit that his speaking abilities as well as his charisma clearly show why he is the orator everyone has claimed him to be. The constant victory claps, slogans, emotional outbursts, and appeals to the "masses" were used in such a way that would make George Bush and Mike Dukakis green with envy.

However elegant Jesse Jackson orates, he desperately needs to improve one thing. He must escape from the "Wall of Emotion" he erects to buffer reality both for himself and his many supporters. It seems that all he did for 45 minutes was give a sermon, as if we were worshipping in his congregation.

Jackson argues dramatically for improved benefits in health care, housing, jobs, social security, minority rights, women's rights, as well as a plethora of issues he feels important in his fight against "conservatism" and what he describes as the aristocratic few trying to maintain the status quo. He claims to champion the masses under the doctrine of "progressive liberalism," trying to make the world a better place to live.

The argument I have with the Reverend is not the fact that he wants America to be an idealistic land of Utopia, following the creed of our Statue of Liberty. America should be, to Jackson, the sanctuary for the huddled masses, and the true home of the free and the land of the brave.

Jesse Jackson speaks, but he really doesn't say anything. He wants to make radical reform in many aspects of the way government treats her people — many of which seem just — yet he gives no real way to follow his Utopian ideals. Better this, more of that, give, take, etc . . . on and on. Yet the Reverend doesn't tell us how. He is all talk and no action. If the Reverend Jackson, on his $1 million a year income is truly dedicated to the ideals he espouses, then let him prove it for a change. I want some factual ideas of not only what he wants to change but how he wants to change it. If he is dedicated to helping the homeless, I want to know how. Not that he sees it as the right thing to do. Where will he get the money, resources or whatever is necessary to do the job? Let's see some ideas, with the facts to back it up.

Finally, I don't understand the turn of attitudes in regards to Jackson's platform associated with the Jewish faith. Four years ago he termed them "hymies" and he was hugging their self-proclaimed enemy, Yasser Arafat. Friday, however, he claimed to be the protector of Jews against anti-Semitism. I don't believe it. Any man who has shown the disrespect and contempt against the Jewish faith that Jesse Jackson has in the past had better start explaining his drastic turn around as the defender of Judaism. I want to know why.

The Reverend Jesse Jackson has shown his eloquent speaking ability, as well as his inability truly to confront the issues he claims to represent and stand up for. I hope when we see and hear the Reverend as he begins his political climb for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1992, and when we cast our votes, that we base it on intellect and ability of a candidate and not on emotional ignorance.

UCLA isn't immune to the profit motive

Jim Lamoureux

I wish to challenge the sincerity of what seems to have been acknowledged as a general University policy of open expression and debate, as evidenced by UCLA's recent decision to host the last debate between Dukakis and Bush. On the surface it appears that the UCLA administration has a genuine commitment to free expression and the marketplace of ideas. I wonder, however, what actually was the true motivation behind this offer?

It certainly couldn't have been a desire to foster debate and discussion. If this was the case, why was the debate closed to students and other spectators? Most officials even acknowledged that the debates were designed to be seen through the media, rather than in person. The real motivation for UCLA's offer wasn't to allow students and others to see and hear what the candidates had to say, so that we could make more informed decisions. No, it was much simpler. It was the bottom line, the chance to make a profit or to gain prestige. When the administration boasts that the debate might become known as the "UCLA Debate" but doesn't even mention the fact that students will be excluded from the floor, or that debate might provide meaningful discussion of issues, I think it becomes clear that at the heart of the decision was the desire to boost UCLA's reputation. Not the chance to foster discussion. Not the desire to seek intellectual pursuits or academic excellence. Not even the simple opportunity to extend a generous offer of assistance. The administration should not try to hide the fact that its decision was based primarily on the potential profit to be gained from hosting the debate.

I think this fact is borne out when one considers that UCLA has cut the budget of its own debate team — a team which consistently ranks as one of the top few teams in the country — by 54 percent this year. This seems fairly inconsistent with any desire to foster open discussion and debate. Consider what UCLA spent to host the presidential debate. Yet at the same time it seems compelled to stifle the dissemination of ideas by its own by cutting their funds? The entire budget of the debate team probably represents only a fraction of the money spent on the debate. Yet the administration allocates resources to one and not other.

The only possible explanation is that UCLA's objective is not to foster expression. If this were the case, it would have allowed students to actually see the democratic process at work. It would not have slashed the budget for its own debate team. Sometimes I wonder if the objective of UCLA is the pursuit of knowledge, or the pursuit of profit. After all, I wonder what would happen if Bruin football or basketball games were closed to students, or the football and basketball teams lost 54 percent of their budgets?

attendant to potter and was designed for graduates of secondary (high) school who didn't pass the rigorous exams necessary to get into a university. "Every senior school in the land should have a copy," read the book's jacket.

Out of curiosity I looked up "Refuse Collector" (garbage man). This is what the job description said:

"You empty people's dust bins and take away rubbish. Is it for you? You work in a team — usually three loaders and two drivers, empty the dustbins (or throw the sacks of rubbish) into the back of the dust cart, return the bins, pick up anything you've dropped."

Under the "Pros and Cons" it read: "It is hard, dirty work, you are on your feet all day and out in all weathers, some people look down on you, emptying a smelly bin crawling with maggots isn't much fun and there's a lot of competition for the job." I guess that was the "Cons."

The "Pros" said something about being able to "knock off early once you've done your agreed number of streets; there's no boss breathing down your neck; the money isn't bad for the hours you work; and you make a bit extra from the scraps you sell, from tips and from Christmas boxes."

It's the same in the United States, for the most part, but I haven't seen any books like this here that detail blue-collar work as if it were a means to an end. Most people still aim higher; America still seems the "land of opportunity," unless I'm mistaken, and education is fairly accessible to everyone. According to another book I read in England about working in the United States, "American salaries are about two and a half times higher than UK ones" (although the cost of living is also 60 percent higher, and there is nothing like the range of benefits and degree of employment protection available in Europe).

"The United States is the richest and most successful economy in the industrialized world, despite the stock market crash in 1987," the book stated. It also said that the U.S. was "a continent, rather than a country, and contains wide differences in geography, climate, people and customs."

I had to laugh about that to myself when I was at the barbeque the other night. Reading those books had given me a totally different perspective of my country and made me think a lot about my future, especially when I read the job description of Writer: "It's exhausting, insecure, competitive, lonely and usually badly paid," it said.

I think that was under the "Cons," but I'm not sure. I don't think I ever want to be "plugged into reality." ■

Is it only offensive if someone notices?

By Karol Dean

As I was driving home from campus Friday afternoon, I was feeling a little better than usual about the world. Shari Brooks' viewpoint article (Bruin, Oct. 12) concerning Zeta Beta Tau's unpleasant display of sexist slogans had been responded to by Steven Sibulkin, the president of the fraternity (Bruin, Oct. 14). I mused as I left Lot 8 about sending copies of the article to the ultra-conservative president of the east coast university where I had done my undergraduate work — a place where concerns about sexism and other issues were summarily rejected with defensive rhetoric — to show him how pleasantly intelligent members of a university community could work out their problems and provide an environment where all felt safe.

Then I turned the corner onto Gayley, a part of the street where several fraternities have their houses. There was a small caravan of motor homes parked in front, and students were painting the outside of the vehicles with sexist and homophobic slogans and drug and sexual innuendos in preparation for driving the motor homes to the football game. Were these students members of the various houses? That was my assumption upon watching the scene.

While I was sure that the drivers of the various vehicles were not "stoned" or "drunk drivers," as the writing around the driver's window claimed, I was struck by the irony that the students of UCLA had forgotten so quickly the messages of the two presidential candidates, guests on our campus only the night before, regarding the seriousness of the drug threat to American society. George Bush and Michael Dukakis (who were also lampooned on one of the motor homes) would not have been amused.

I was also struck by the callousness with which the students disregarded the ZBT exchange of the last couple of days. I am somewhat assured that Mr. Sibulkin would have done his best to discourage this behavior among the members of his fraternity, but was the message lost on other students? What did they think the point of Ms. Brooks' article was? Is it only offensive if someone complains?

As a former undergraduate at another university myself, I do not feel that students should not have fun. Personal decisions regarding use of drugs and alcohol and one's sex life are really something I think we must have the maturity to handle. Further, I do not feel the University has the responsibility to monitor the social activities of fraternities or other student groups, but I do feel the groups themselves, or their governing boards, can appropriately consider tasteful ways to represent themselves to the outside world.

So when I saw the slogan that requested "If U swallow, follow" I did not. And I was not stuck to the "Pussy Magnet" that exhorted me to "Show Tits," but "Don't laugh, you daughter is inside."

I really wasn't laughing, knowing that members of the UCLA community with whom I share campus facilities were inside.

Director Mira Nair makes film focusing on lives of street children of Bombay

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

MIRA NAIR, director of the film Salaam Bombay!, provides a contrast to what you usually expect to see in a director/producer. Strong-willed and self-confident, yet very attractive, small with large dark brown eyes, she looked very tired and almost hungover from an exhausting publicity tour when I met her at the Four Seasons Hotel on the edge of Beverly Hills. Her voice is thick and throaty in an appealing sort of way, and she speaks comfortably educated American English with only a trace of rolling in her r's and a slight deepening of vowels to hint at her Indian origins.

Nair studied at Delhi university, then went to Harvard, where she made the jump from stage to documentary filmmaking. So Far From India, one of her first films, is about an Indian immigrant in New York, the wife he left behind in India, and their very strange reunion after years of living apart.

Her next film, India Cabaret, is about strippers in Bombay, women that are considered immoral and polluted by the world around them. "It's told from their point of view," Nair explained, "and in their words examines their position in a society that uses them and casts them aside, while they keep struggling on and are aware all the time of society's double standards."

Children of Desired Sex is a public-affairs documentary about the use of amniocentesis to test for the sex of unborn children so that females could be aborted — a practice Nair describes as "a horrible misuse of technology to reinforce traditional preferences for male children."

Nair's latest directorial effort is the just-released film Salaam Bombay (opening today for an extended run at the Nuart theater in West Los Angeles), a move into the border area between documentary and fiction. It's a weirdly horrific and yet strangely sympathetic intertwining of the stories of the residents of the red light district of Bombay, seen from the viewpoint of Chaipau, an 11-year old boy whose parents left him with a small-time carnival. When the circus owner abandons him, he is left without a home.

Director Mira Nair. JIM PICKRELL

In Bombay, his goal is to raise the 500 rupees (about $36) that he needs before he can return to his village. He falls in with a group of street children in a neighborhood filled with pimps, prostitutes, and drug dealers — who make the children's way of life oddly logical and normal compared with the surrealistically weird and grotesque world of the grown-ups around them.

The poverty of these people is incredible, but the adult characters in this movie take a bad situation and do their best to make it worse; and none of them are able to rise out of the depressing moral and physical decay they live in.

The characters who are most sympathetic are the children. The film is excellent in following their viewpoint without ever condescending or relying on Bambi-esque cuteness. This in itself is an unusual accomplishment.

The film has an exceptional naturalness about it, so that even the weirdest scenes become completely believable. They should be, for much of what is shown in this film is real. The story has a clear through-line centered around the character of Chaipau and his pursuit of 500 rupees to go home, yet many of the scenes are not completely connected. There is'nt a strong sense of cause and effect — but more a sense of individuals cast adrift in a storm.

"The film was inspired by kids in the street and their spirit of living pretty much against all odds," Nair explains. "The script was written and developed after talking to a number of kids in the street, and then through my scriptwriter's own imagination and my own experience working in documentaries."

Salaam Bombay! was filmed on a budget of somewhat under a million dollars using as actors some of the children who live on the streets of Bombay. The film was edited in New York, and post-production was done in France, making it a truly international production.

Before the shooting began, an acting workshop group was formed to prepare the children for the roles that echoed their own real-life experiences, which were not always completely negative.

'Bombay!': Nightmare world of survival

By I.Nordstrom, Staff Writer

■ FILM: Salaam Bombay! Director/producer Mira Nair. Opens today for an extended run at the Nuart Theater in West Los Angeles.

"Go to Bombay, return a movie star!" says the sardonic man behind the train ticket booth in Salaam Bombay!, and the viewer is plunged into a sordid, horrifying world of child prostitution, drugs, hideous slums, and seemingly inescapable poverty.

The images of Salaam Bombay! — of a metropolis gone numb with corruption, of a vast populace subsisting in squalor — are not easily forgotten. Though it is often rambling and thematically disconnected, the new Indian import provides an arresting look at the plight of that country's street children — and a frightening parallel to the lives of America's homeless.

Producer-director Mira Nair's story revolves around young Chaipau (Shafiq Syed), a young boy who flees to Bombay after his family abandons him, telling him not to return until he has made a considerable amount of money.

Chaipau quickly falls in with one of the vagabond gangs of street kids who roam the city, working, stealing, and begging. He and his little band live in a nightmare world where children

'The Seagull' suffers from miscasting

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER: Anton Chekhov's The Seagull. A new translation by Michael Frayn. Directed by Charles Marowitz. Sets by Ralph Koltai, Costumes by Noel Taylor. With Judd Nelson, Nan Martin, Mary Crosby, Jonathan McMurtry, McNally Sagal and Peter Van Norden. At LATC, Fifth and Spring. Through Nov. 13. Seats about $20 but half-price rush one hour before curtain. (213)667-6500.

You know us critics — we're often suckers for these Masterpiece Theater things! Bias revealed, I must say LATC's new Seagull is the best show in town (well, there isn't a helluva lot worth seeing right now), even though it is fatally flawed by central miscasting.

Well, not all the critics were suckers for it. In a bizarre fashion, the four major papers in town split right down the line. The Times, ever CRA boosters of LATC fare, loved it. With noses pressed against the glass of the downtown power struggle, the Examiner loathed it and compared the design to the interior of a Motel Six. The anti-establishment L.A. Weekly hated it too, but The Reader, in its new determination to be the alternative-alternative paper (cf. a civic booster these days), thought it was fine.

American actors, according to legend, have a terrible time with Chekhov. The theory for the reason is that because of an over-reverence for Stanislavsky (the great Russian acting teacher), they approach the great Russian playwright as if entering church.

Such genuflection is considered wrong because Chekhov was not Dostoevsky and actually wrote gentle comedy (or as currently fashionable, "dramedy"). It is hard to tell what American actors and directors do, though, because he is rarely produced. This is the first Seagull I have ever seen. Most of my experience with him is watching acting class scenes (usually inspired young women impersonating the Three Sisters).

Also according to tradition, British actors and directors are not intimidated and have no trouble playing him. Perhaps born (as an artist) between two eras into modernism, Chekhov still requires high style, and of course the British have it.

So it is appropriate that he should be so well-staged by the Englishman Charles Marowitz, LATC's associate director, who last gave us the brilliantly riotous Joe Orton play, What the Butler Saw, last spring. (However, Marowitz was undone by central — although box office — miscasting as we shall see.)

The Seagull is about the unrequited love of Konstantin (Judd Nelson) for a young, ambitious but little-talented actress, Nina (Mary Crosby). Secondarily, Konstantin's quest is to establish himself as a writer, where he is thwarted by his mother's self-concern and vanity. She is a famous actress, Madame Arkadina, who struggles to remain young and desirable and hang on to her money.

She derides his playwrighting and infuriatingly dotes on a middle-aged lover, Trigorin — a famous writer of popular and superficial short stories — who seduces Nina away from Konstantin, ruins her and abandons her to return to Arkadina. The play covers two years in their lives.

One-way love pervades Seagull. There are several mooning, glad-to-be-unhappy types populating the cast. Standout for me was (Miss) McNally Sagal as Masha, who's crazy for Konstantin who doesn't know she's alive. She has the best, most memorable and oft-quoted lines and plays Masha's morbid gloominess in high comic (!) style. In truth, Sagal was the only member of the cast — or anything on stage — that was evocative of Mother Russia, a must fight to survive, wearing rags, sleeping in alleyways, and trying to keep one step ahead of the law.

'Bombay'

Adults are the exploiters, prostituting, cheating, or beating the children. Accepting the misery they seem doomed to endure, the kids simply adapt to the abuse.

While the other tenacious children are grittily determined to survive Chaipau seems to live solely on his desire to make enough money to return home. One of the film's most wrenching moments is when Chaipau pays a man to send a letter to his mother, saying that he misses her and is saving his money. After the boy leaves, the man simply throws the letter in the trash.

In Chillum (Raghubir Yadav), the neighborhood drug dealer and addict, the boy finds his first friend and confidante, only to lose him to drugs.

Chillum's funeral procession through crowded city streets — he is held aloft by the children and covered in flowers — captures the frightening, surreal quality of Bombay street life. Strange, frantically theatrical clips from Indian cinema — such as a woman absurdly singing "I am Miss Hawaii" while men in blackface dance around her, and shrill, Western/Eastern pop music — add to the film's atmosphere of decadence and chaos.

Unfortunately, many of the characters that move across Salaam Bombay!'s frenzied kaleidoscope remain distant and somehow detached. Though this heightens the movie's sense of an hallucinatory, unreal world, it makes for a thin, disconnected plotline at points.

Manju (Hansa Vithal), the eight-year-old daughter of the prostitute Rekha (Aneeta Kanwar), is an amazing exception to the sometimes superficial characters. An actress whose expressive eyes tell more story than her scripted lines, Vithal portrays a fragile, lonely child who watches her mother "work" and braves the tantrums of her pimp father, Baba (Nana Patekar). Chaipau and his transient band, natural on screen, also overshadow the older actors.

From the beautiful "Sweet Sixteen" who is sold into prostitution, to the hundreds of kids who live, forgotten by the world, in the dreaded "Chiller Room" (a facility for juvenile delinquents), Nair shows children as abandoned, dispossessed and abused.

Perhaps the most disturbing aspect of Salaam Bombay! is the way the adults are so resigned to the corruption, filth, and dehumanizing conditions that they willingly exploit these kids. Assaulted by these images of poverty and exploitation, anyone will be touched by the blunt revelations of Salaam Bombay! and their implications about America's treatment of its own street people.

Manju (Hansa Vithal) bids her mother goodbye as she is escorted back into the 'chiller room.'

Judd Nelson and Mary Crosby in 'The Seagull.'

'SEAGULL': Miscasting

flavor somewhat missed.

(One of her lines, at the top of the play, will come in handy for you. The man who loves her says, "Masha, why do you always wear black?"

"Because I'm in mourning for my life," she intones.)

Surprisingly, Judd Nelson is not embarrassing as Konstantin — his adolescent brat-packness works well for most of the evening and he is quite expressive, vocally and physically, for an actor without a RADA training. Yet ultimately he fails the play, due to a miscasting — of temperament — a lack of depth, even if you will, soul.

Something terribly, terribly tragic occurs in the final moments of the play and Nelson's Konstantin has not prepared us. (I just don't want to tell you the ending because most of you, like me, have never seen it, and narrative suspense kept us very highly involved.)

Mary Crosby, who took a drubbing from other critics, was adorable the night I saw her, in one of the most difficult roles in the theater. In the first half of the play, as a young, unspoiled country woman, she was absolutely lovely. She is the sole performer in Konstantin's avant-garde one-act play which Mme. Arkadina so rudely interrupts. Crosby handles a difficult, long, poetic monologue beautifully — almost as if it were an actor's timing exercise (you move only between the lines, keeping still while speaking, or conversely, only on the lines and moving in the spaces). Her gestures were organic and graceful and the listener follows Konstantin's poetry.

Later, as a disgraced and abandoned unwed mother (whose child has died), pathetically clinging to her failed career and obsession still for her seducer, she was believable even if she didn't tear your heart out.

Veteran television actress Nan Martin (St. Elsewhere) and Jonathan McMurtry, who has perfected a classical style in regional theater, were wonderful as Arkadina and Trigorin. Their monologues, especially hers begging him not to abandon her, were brilliantly authoritative.

Judd Nelson and Nan Martin in Chekhov's classic.

'SEAGULL': Chekhov

The set, criticized as over-modern, was terrific, if, as noted, not very Russian (these people did try to ape Western European aristocracy, but I don't feel it totally obliterated the surroundings). Much of the first act takes place on Arkadina's summer estate on the shores of a lake. Set designer Ralph Koltai uses a controversial huge sheet of light blue vinyl as its representation, a dramatic and memorable solution (we were not reminded of a motel shower curtain as was the Examiner critic — it was lots bigger).

So, wallowing in Masterpiece Theater carryings-on, we were happy and considered the evening a success. Subsequent consideration has, however, revealed the flaw in the production and unfortunately, it is a big one. It was embodied in Nelson and Crosby, whom we liked while we watched most of the play. They were charming, attractive and stylish, considering that most of their experience has been movies and T.V. But they were not kissed with greatness and their tragedy, especially his, at the final curtain seemed highly arbitrary.

Nelson as Konstantin was just not the fellow who would go off and do the terrible thing he did. (Actually, I expected him to find how desirable Masha was in her adoration of him since up to that point we had witnessed unalloyed genteel comedy.)

After the excellence of what has come before, the final tragic moment should play like one of those terrible, final bass chords in a Beethoven piano concerto and resound through the hall leaving the audience too stunned to move. Instead, it comes like a small, treble "plink."

One can then fault the director too for only getting style but little substance from his leads. Given their deficiencies there must have been some way to drag the tragedy out of them and foreshadow it for us. So, Seagull does miss — and it's a big miss — but it's still wonderful. Isn't that odd?

Nair

"A kid can always make a buck, as you see in the film," Nair says. "You have nobody to answer to. It gets lonely sometimes, but there are lots of other kids like you, and it's dangerous too, but that's part of the fun. It's weird, but it's an independent kind of addiction."

While the central roles were children, the characters of the pimp, the prostitute, the madam, and the drug addict were played by professional actors. "They were also part of the workshop," Nair explained.

"That was part of the deal that we made. They had to be involved with the whole process of working with the children, so that by the time we started shooting, the actors were pretty keyed in to the kids' skills."

Nair's efforts with the children turned out very well, and help make the children's point of view very convincing, even when compared with the experienced and more traditionally trained adults.

"Throughout the shooting it was a question of directing them to be as understated as possible, as far away from the kind of acting they were used to doing in Indian cinema, which is kind of loud and artificial," she said.

"It was a unique sort of experiment, and a very successful one, not just in terms of the movie, but also in terms of our relationship with the kids, and that has continued since the shooting ended," continued Nair.

Despite India's socialist-leaning orientation, a desperately non-functional economy leaves the government a very limited ability to offer solutions to homeless children, prostitutes, drug addicts, and other people living on the edge of Indian society.

"The government exists, and institutions exist run by the government based on the premise of social welfare," Nair explains. "Even the 'Chiller Room' in the movie is based on the premise of social welfare, in that they would rescue an abandoned child and reunite it with its parents. The reality is somewhat different. It takes a long time. Sometimes they parents want to claim the child and sometimes they don't. This whole process is completely debilitating for the kid. It's something that we don't feel works.

"The movie isn't made to submit to some political agenda," Nair claims, but nevertheless the film touches on topics she is very concerned about. "It's simply to reveal a reality that is strong and powerful and wasted. We thought that we would use Salaam Bombay! to work with organizations that work with street children, but we didn't find any that we could endorse fully, because we didn't believe in the attitudes that were being meted out to street kids. Often it's a reformist attitude, 'we must reform you, uplift you, change you'; and it doesn't work.

"We will use part of the proceeds from this film to create two centers for street kids, one in Bombay and one in Delhi, and these we hope to open in January," Nair continued.

Salaam Bombay! offers a fascinating glimpse of a world that few people acknowledge or like to think about, yet shows the strength and adaptability of children in the most extreme of circumstances.

"I don't feel that the film is a film of despair or of horrific poverty," says Nair. "It is life-affirmative, it's about people who are invisible in our world, not just in Indian society, but in any society, in terms of street children who are wasted potential, in terms of what they can do, which is obvious in Salaam Bombay!. These children continue to live with enormous dignity, humor and great style in a situation that you or I would find impossible.''

The grim reality faced by the children in the streets of Bombay is by no means unique or even at its worst in India. ''The kind of deep-seated aloneness that I have encountered in America among street people and among street children is a more devastating condition,'' Nair continues. ''You only have to open your eyes here in your own backyard to see that the situation in Salaam Bombay! is not an exotic or anthropological condition relegated to the Third World.''

Michelangelo: New drawing

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Michelangelo drawing of the suicide of Cleopatra, discovered last August, is currently on display for the first time at the National Gallery of Art.

The drawing had not been noticed before because it was on the reverse side of a better known work that had been pasted onto a backing. It was revealed when conservators removed the better-known drawing (which also depicts the ancient Egyptian ruler), because it was not being preserved properly on the backing.

The well-known drawing on the front illustrates the traditional story of her suicide, in which she had an asp brought to her in a basket of figs and put it on her arm. It shows the snake biting her breast. Cleopatra's hair is carefully dressed and her expression is calm and melancholy.

The newly-found drawing, much less finished, shows her hair in disorder, her eyes staring out at the viewer and her mouth open as if in a scream. It will be at the gallery's West Building until Dec. 11.

ASTRO•GRAPH
Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Oct. 19, 1988

Your financial projection looks promising in the year ahead. By the same token, you could also be a bit more extravagant than usual. Don't let these inclinations offset your gains.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Today, guard against tendencies to put too much emphasis on the wrong interest. Focus your attention on things that are productive and not on your pleasurable pastimes. Libra, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Much can be achieved today, provided you can operate independently of others. If you get too involved, there's a chance you will not finish that which you start.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Usually you're an optimistic person, but today your projections could be too negative for your own good. Don't anticipate defeat where you should be courting success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Today you may be a little too stingy with people who usually treat you generously. Ironically, you might be too open-handed with those less deserving of your largesse.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You're not apt to have difficulty making quick decisions early in the day. However, as time ticks on, you might find yourself beset with doubts.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) If it's your duty to purvey important information to others today, make sure you do it accurately. To be on the safe side it might be best to work from notes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) It's been noted we earn our enemies, but often don't deserve our friends. A well-meaning pal might unintentionally do something today that could create complications.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Be guarded today so that you don't appear too materialistic around associates. Keep in mind that a person without warmth is similar to a house without windows.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your qualities of leadership will be evident today, and you could be rather commanding. However, you must not be too harsh with those who don't immediately snap-to.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Where your work is concerned today, don't make change just for its own sake. Try to keep in mind the old adage, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) There are indications you might be a bit out of sync with your contemporaries today. If so, it will prove wise to dissent in silence rather than causing a row.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Pursuit of goals could occupy you so totally today that you may be unaware of the needs of others. You may operate in a manner co-workers will find offensive.

Dallas off to weak start

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas — The Dallas Cowboys' death spiral has reached the death valley days of 1965.

Not since the 7-7 season of 1965 has Dallas started 2-5.

To make matters worse, the Cowboys may have to play most of the remainder of the NFL season without veteran quarterback Danny White. He suffered a sprained knee ligament in Sunday's 17-7 loss to the Chicago Bears.

Cowboys' trainer Don Cochren said White could miss several weeks until the swelling goes down.

"There is swelling, but it doesn't appear the ligament is torn," Cochren said.

White has a walking cast on his right knee.

"I could feel my knee pop," said White, who suffered the injury during the third period but played the remainder of the game.

White's injury elevated Kevin Sweeney, who has yet to play in a regular season non-strike game, to second-string status behind Steve Pelluer.

Pelluer suffered a slight concussion on the third play of Sunday's game, when hit in the head by Bears' middle linebacker Mike Singletary.

Pelluer didn't play again, but was expected to be ready for Sunday's game at Philadelphia.

"I'm going to have to be more careful with my running," Pelluer said. "I don't think it was a cheap shot. I was trying to slide but I wasn't down. It's hard for me to remember what happened. My lights dimmed a little."

The Bears are always tough on Pelluer, who suffered a mild concussion in a preseason game against Chicago.

Dallas coach Tom Landry said the Bears should have been flagged for roughing on the play.

"Steve was trying to go down," Landry said. "He was trying to pull up. I don't care what the referee (Pat Tunney) said. They should be trying to protect the quarterback."

There have been 21 injuries to NFL quarterbacks this season.

Two other Cowboys may miss Sunday's game against the Eagles.

The Cowboys may also be looking for a placekicker.

Roger Ruzen, who recently signed a three-year, $600,000 contract, missed two field goals Sunday, making four for 10 this year.

"We'll still work with him but he's been too tight," Landry said. "We may have to look around and see what's on the free agent market."

Dallas' worst season was an 0-11-1 expansion year in 1960. The Cowboys have not won fewer than four games since then. Their worst non-expansion years were 4-9-1 in 1961 and 4-10 in 1963.

ALCOHOL AWARENESS WEEK RESOLUTION
OCTOBER 17-21, 1988

Whereas, the misuse of alcohol is a major problem nationwide, and today the leading cause of death for ages 15-24 are accidents involving driving under the infuence of alcohol;

Whereas, the majority of reported acquaintance rape cases involve the use of alcohol in which either one or both of the individuals are intoxicated;

Whereas, 10% of our society are alcoholics, 20% are children of alcoholics, and 20% will become involved with or marry an alcoholic;

Whereas, drunk drivers pose a threat to our family, friends, as well as to ourselves, we must constantly be aware of the negative consequences of alcohol;

Whereas, the week of October 17-21, 1988, has been designated as National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week;

Therefore be it resolved, that we, the Undergraduate Students Association Council, aware of these dangers, fully endorse National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week and those organizations dedicated to the eradication of alcohol abuse,

And be it further resolved, that we, the Undergraduate Students Association Council encourage the campus community to take this opportunity to evaluate and educate themselves to the dangers associated with alcohol use.

Harrick

often, if the Bruins expect to win.

"It's been different (the first two days of practice)," Richardson said. "Coach Harrick demands a lot, in drills as well as in games and practices. He's a lot like my high school coach. He wants hustle. I think we're going to do a lot this season. Without Gerald, a lot falls back on me."

Richardson was referring to his expected backcourt mate Gerald Madkins, who was injured this summer in a scooter accident.

"Madkins was our best outside shooter, our best defender and our best practice player. He's a guy with a smile a mile wide who loves to play basketball. His loss really hurts," said Harrick.

The two other returning lettermen who will be in the spotlight will be juniors Trevor Wilson and Kevin Walker.

Wilson, the bruising rebounding machine who cleaned the glass to the tune of 9.4 boards a game last year, will most likely have to pick up his 15.4 points per game average and play more under control. Wilson admits that he "has to settle down on the court."

"I'm ready to start the season," said Wilson. "We have really pulled together as a team and are really pushing each other. So far, playing for Coach Harrick has been a real positive experience. There has been a lot more intensity, and I think he is going to get a lot out of this team. There is a lot more discipline"

Walker will most likely get the call in the middle, a spot vacated by the departed Kelvin Butler and the transferred Greg Foster. Walker is also an outstanding outside shooter, but he struggled his first two years.

"It's a relief knowing that I'll play," he said. "I just want to put my first two years behind me. I know I have to be a leader this year, because we don't have many older guys. Coach Harrick is working us vary hard. There is no slacking off. We are all here to play, to learn and improve. There is definitely a world of difference between now and last season."

Veal

against Oregon State, where he recorded 345 yards in total offense (142 rushing, 203 passing). It was the biggest output for any player in the Pac-10 last year.

According to Tomey, 1988 has been a slightly rougher trail for Veal after he lost his starting job.

"Ronald didn't respond well to being a backup," the Cats mentor explained, "But last week he did the best job we've had at quarterback all year."

A glance at Veal's numbers certainly tells the tale.

Veal completed only two of seven pass attempts for 28 yards against Oregon State while rushing for 26 yards and a touchdown on four carries. The next two weeks, coming off the bench, he completed only one pass each versus Texas Tech and Oklahoma. He also carried the ball only once in each of those games.

Letters

Aikman not all

Editor:

The UCLA Bruin football team should be commended on a job well done over the past seven weeks. They have displayed outstanding teamsmanship.

The Daily Bruin sports editors, managers, etc. . . .should be ashamed for not giving the team, as a whole, credit that is long overdue. Following each game there is always a big write-up on how well Troy Aikman has done. The captions usually read something of this nature: "The Bruins Beat Team A and Troy Aikman Was Nothing Less Than Spectacular." Three pages of praise and glory for Troy Aikman and approximately a paragraph or two for the rest of the team.

Aikman does not play alone on the field. If there were no receivers then there would be no completed passes. If the Mike Farrs, Shawn Willses, and Eric Balls, etc. . . were non-existant, then there would be no touchdowns. If the Jim Wahlers, Carnell Lakes and Darryl Henleys were non-existant, then there would be no one to keep the other team from scoring.

The articles that have been written in the past few weeks are all about the Troy Aikman football team and not the UCLA Bruin football team.

The game of football is all about two teams playing on a field. Each team has eleven men on the field at one time. Whatever is done on the field is done by the team as a whole and not by an individual. Troy Aikman is a great quarterback but there are 103 other players who deserve the recognition that Aikman gets, whether they are playing on the field or cheering their teammates on from the sidelines.

Tennis in Georgia

UCLA's Pat Galbreath won two matches at the Volvo Collegiate Tennis Championships in Athens, Georgia to advance to the third round of qualifying Tuesday.

The qualifying rounds will be played to determine four players who will enter the main draw on Thursday.

Galbreath, a senior, defeated Derek Brooks of Mississippi, 6-4, 6-4 in the first round and defeated Mario Pacheco of Louisiana State 5-7, 6-2, 7-5 in the second round. Galbreath will take on Jim Childs of Georgia today in third-round action.

UCLA sophomore Jason Netter wasn't quite as fortunate, though, as he lost a first-round match to Clinton Ferreira of Alabama, 5-7, 5-7.

Other Bruins in the tournament, Brian Garrow and Buff Farrow, were seeded coming in and don't start play until the main draw begins on Thursday.

IM spikers set to go

By Patti Wagonhurst
Contributor

Last year, 'Servaces' swept the 'A' bracket of the women's Intramural volleyball league. This year, however, the Servaces squad is not in the league. Yet there are six new independent teams—in addition to last year's sorority teams—which would all like to take the number one spot and win the tournament.

Skull Crushers, a returning independent team, finished second last year, losing to Servaces in the final, 11-4, 11-9. Skull Crushers did well throughout the tournament, only finding trouble with Delta Gamma in the second round. Skull Crushers escaped, though, with a close 11-5, 5-11, 11-9 win.

The Skull Crushers are back, and defeated Kappa Alpha Theta last week in two games. Most of the Skull Crushers players are returning, and they should continue with a strong offensive game.

However, Kappa Alpha Theta feels that its loss last week is no indication of its ability. "We have so much depth this year," said Kelly Grover, outside hitter and captain for Theta. Theta has five returning players, although power hitter Shanna Reiden has graduated. Teri Richards and Kristen Hoefer, both new to the Theta team, will be taking the place of Reiden.

Delta Gamma also has five returning players, and a number of tough additions. Delta Gamma is looking forward to continuing victory this year. "We're going to use our strong defense this year to help us win games," said Kelly Faucett, outside hitter and captain. "Our offense has also really improved, and we're looking forward to hitting some balls."

Ace Bloc is an independent team that is serious about fun and victory in the league. "Since we're an independent team, we're die-hard volleyball players. We want to have a good time," said Yu-Fui Hung, captain of Ace Bloc. The team had a bye last week, but Hung feels that her team has the basic skills to do well. A strong player will be Katherine Sarasaim in the middle blocking position.

Mutant Ninjas have not started practice yet, but captain Teiko Nishi feels that her team will be tough to beat. All six players played high school ball.

Delta Sig holds on despite shaky win

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

This fall's most important competition, namely the battle for the men's intramural flag football crown, took a backseat to the presidential debate last week. The hordes of media and security that descended on the UCLA IM field forced postponement of all but four of the Division A games.

Thus, although the first, second and sixth ranked teams played in the four games, only one tea, moved in the weekly poll.

Top-ranked Delta Sigma Phi, three-time defending Division A champion, seems to be starting off the season in first gear. In the spotlighted game of the week, Delta Sig struggled against a stubborn No. 7 Zeta Beta Tau team, and held out for a 14-7 win. A win is a win, but if Delta Sig is to capture their fourth IM football title, they'll obviously have to make some improvements. Despite the scare, however, Delta Sig remains the No. 1 team. ZBT did play well against the dynasty, but an 0-1 team doesn't belong in the top ten.

Alpha Tau Omega, the No. 2-ranked team, won twice last week. They beat Theata Chi 19-0 in football and scored a TKO on the Theta Chi quarterback. The ugly side of sports showed through as a Theta Chi elbow was answered with an ATO fist, resulting in a broken nose for Theta Chi's signal caller. The assaulting ATO player was subsequently suspended for one game.

If ATO can keep their team off the suspended list, they should challenge Delta Sig in the playoffs. Until someone, maybe ATO, can derail the Delta Sig train, ATO remains No. 2.

Sixth-ranked Sigma Chi proved that they may be somewhat underrated, as they blasted Tau Kappa Epsilon 35-0. In regard to the polls, Sigma Chi will have to be satisfied with their rout on the field. They remain the No. 6 team due to the fact that the third, fourth and fifth-ranked teams have yet to play at press time.

Moving into the top ten for the first time is Sigma Pi. For the most part, it's because only four games have been played, as of Monday morning, and they're 1-0. Last week they knocked off Public Enemy, 21-6.

Now that Bush and Dukakis are gone, IM football action shifts into gear with a full slate of games. Some shakeups in the weekly poll should come next week.

difficult times with the Bruin block.

This season the Bruin block is stronger than ever. With the best defensive net team in the nation, according to Arizona State University head coach Debbie Brown, the Bruins have only two starting net players under six feet tall—5-9 Samantha Shaver and 5-10 Jenny Evans.

The Bruin blocking duties are led by middle blocker and All-American Daiva Tomkus. At 6-1, Tomkus was responsible for 136 of the team's blocks last season and leads this year as well. "Wall" Tomkus is also one of the most consistent players on the team and has not missed a match in the past two seasons. Offensively, Tomkus has hit above .364 in 13 of her last 14 matches to lead the team and the Pac-10 in hitting percentage.

Playing opposite Tomkus is freshman middle blocker Elaine Youngs. After a preseason injury to Rachel Norris, a 6-4 freshman middle blocker, Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski decided to move Youngs to the middle to fill the void. Youngs has added to a strong attack and has provided a boost to the blocking element. Although not as consistent offensively as Tomkus, Youngs is one of the stronger hitters on the team.

Senior setter Ann Boyer will counter the Gauchos' attack led by Towne. At 6-0, Boyer is one of few setters that is able to attack as well as set. Frequently, Boyer will take a pass and place a dump or attack rather than set, which will keep the Gaucho blockers off guard.

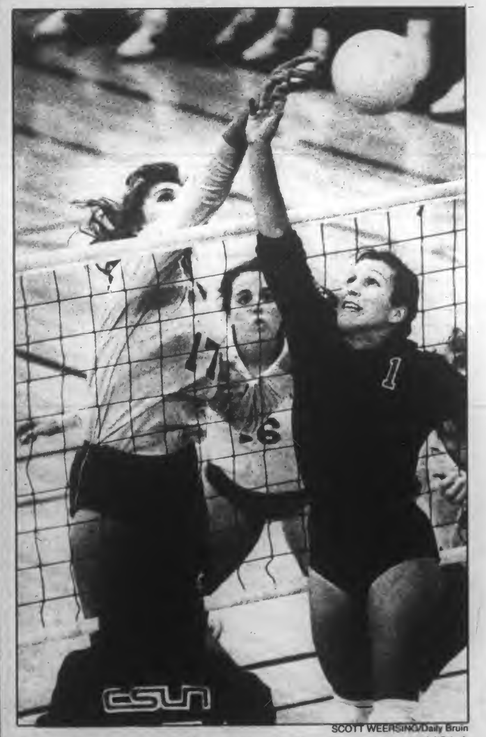
Boyer is considered the premier setter in the nation by many of the coaches and is a big reason for the UCLA's success. As the only senior on the team, Boyer will also have to assume the leadership duties on the court and not allow the team to get complacent and lose concentration.

Outside hitters Jenny Evans, Samantha Shaver, and Jenny Crocker round out the net game for the Bruins. Although Crocker missed all of last season recovering from surgery, she has returned in 1988 with a vengeance, taking advantage of her place-hitting abilities and versatility.

As a former setter, Crocker is a helpful complement to Ann Boyer, who leads the Bruins' 5-1 attack (five attackers, one setter). Shaver and Evans provide the bulk of the Bruins' outside attack. Although both are under 6 feet tall, both have great leaping ability and are two of the hardest hitters on the team.

If the Gauchos hope to repeat last season's victory over UCLA, they will have to accomplish what no other team has been able to accomplish. . .get around the Bruin block. Only three teams all year (Illinois, Oregon, and USC) have been able to compile a hitting percentage over .300. Judging from its current record and itsplay last season, this will be next to impossible for struggling Santa Barbara.

The Bruins will be looking for their 17th consecutive victory of the season against Santa Barbara, three shy of the 20-game streak of the 1983 squad. That streak will be broken, should the Bruins continue their success, at Pauley Pavilion on the 29th of October against Brigham Young University.



SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Daiva Tomkus and the rest of the top-ranked UCLA women's volleyball team will seek revenge versus the Gouchos tonight at UC Santa Barbara.

Athletes of the week

Troy Aikman

Troy Aikman, the senior quarterback from Henryetta, Oklahoma led UCLA to the No. 1 ranking in college football last Saturday by passing the Bruins to a 38-21 victory over the California Golden Bears.

Aikman, who is still being hyped as the nation's leading Heisman candidate, completed 21 of 32 passes for 322 yards and two touchdowns. He also rushed for 30 yards on 6 carries and one touchdown.

"I'll tell you this," said head coach Terry Donahue after the victory in Berkeley. "I think Troy Aikman is the No. 1 quarterback in America. Today, Troy was brilliant. Absolutely brilliant."

For Aikman, however, all the Heisman hype and UCLA's high ranking haven't affected his outlook or attitude.

"There isn't any added pressure for me. I'm not playing for the Heisman Trophy. I'm playing to get to the Rose Bowl. The Heisman hype hasn't really affected me."

Troy Aikman. UCLA SPORTS INFO

Ann Boyer. UCLA SPORTS INFO

Ann Boyer

After playing three of her best matches of the season this past week, Ann Boyer gets the nod as female Athlete of the Week, a title that has gone to the UCLA women's volleyball team for the third consecutive week.

Leading the team to its 16th straight victory last weekend, Boyer finished the week with 15 kills, 116 set assists, 25 digs, and eight blocks with victories over USC, Washington State, Washington.

Boyer is the only senior on a team which is now 16-0 overall and 9-0 in the Pac-10, as well as the top-ranked team in the nation. Boyer was a Pac-10 all-conference team pick, honorable mention All-American, and set the school record in set assists last season.

Boyer serves as the base for the Bruins 5-1 attack and serves as the team leader on the court. At 6-0, and as a left-handed attacker, Boyer is a strong blocker and attacker in addition to her setting skills. She is one of the Bruins strongest candidates for the Pac-10 player of the year award.

A new era is dawning in hoops

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

After six months of anticipation, the new era of UCLA basketball has begun.

Saturday, first-year men's basketball coach Jim Harrick took his new charges out onto the court for the first time. Unfortunately for the team, that floor was in the Men's Gym, not Pauley Pavilion, where the aftermath of the Bush-Dukakis debate was being removed from the once hallowed hardwood floor.

DAN MacMEDAN/Daily Bruin

First-year coach Jim Harrick will look to senior guard Pooh Richardson for leadership in the 1988-89 basketball season, which started last Saturday with the first official practice of the year.

Harrick will also be trying to put a shine back on the Pauley court, taking over after four years of mediocrity and inconsistency under coach Walt Hazzard.

Harrick has set some long-term and short-term goals for the program, and he discussed them at length Monday afternoon in his first press conference of the new season.

"We want UCLA to be a sound, solid program," Harrick said, "that is built on a solid foundation. One that recruits high quality student-athletes and graduates them. We are going after the best players in the country, and we have yet to be denied a home visit by any player we have shown interest in."

Harrick is well aware that there is a lot of pressure being head coach of UCLA—a job that athletic director Peter Dailis refers to as the "toughest job in America."

"I think the alumni here will be realistic," he said. "They want good recruits, and they want them well coached and they want to win decently. And that is what I want and expect from a university the magnitude of UCLA.

"I think UCLA is the kind of program that should be able to get into the tournament every year. We belong as a top ten program. It will be tough, but I'm confident that we can get there. The November 9-16 signing period should have a lot to do with that."

Harrick inherits a team that was 16-14 last year, and 12-6 in the conference. Depth should be a problem for this team, as only five players with any kind of playing experience return.

In terms of style, Harrick has said that his teams will "play half-court man-to-man and some half-court zone. I'd say that full-court pressure is a possibility, but only after evaluating the team will I know more.

"We will run the fast break and play an up-tempo game," he said. "This will be a team that scores a third of the time on our half-court offense, a third of the time on our fast-break and a third of the time as a result of our defense."

The players, for their part, are excited and optimistic about the upcoming season.

Philadelphia's own Pooh Richardson is back for his senior year, and a lot will ride on his shoulders. Richardson will have to work his backcourt magic

Bruins to face Gauchos

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

The top-ranked and undefeated UCLA women's volleyball team will travel to play the UC Santa Barbara Gauchos tonight in the 59th match-up between the two teams. The Bruins hold a 51-7 advantage in the series—but will have a score to settle with the Gauchos.

When the Bruins traveled to Santa Barbara last year, UCLA came away with a loss that began a streak of troubles. This season, however, the unranked Gauchos have had their share of troubles, recording only a .500 record of 10-10.

The nation's best team should have little trouble disposing of the Gauchos, who rely on their setter, senior Liz Towne, for leadership. Aside from Towne, the bulk of the Gaucho attack will come from middle blocker Christy Lee and outside hitter Wendy Robins. Both sophomores had starting roles last season and they both had

The 'Cats love their Veal

Sophomore quarterback gets the call against top-ranked Bruins

By Michael Bartlett
Senior Staff Writer

The Arizona offense will return this week to the "Vealbone".

Sophomore quarterback Ronald Veal will be starting against the No. 1 team in America, the UCLA Bruins, this Saturday at 12:30 (ABC-TV). Veal is fresh off an outstanding performance last week against Washington State as the Wildcats kept their bowl hopes alive.

Veal, a better runner than passer, rushed 22 times for 70 and four touchdowns. Three of his touchdowns were scored in the fourth quarter as the Cats came from behind to beat the Cougars, 45-28.

Veal also had his best passing day of the season, hitting on 10 of 18 attempts for 117 yards.

Arizona Sports Info.

Ronald Veal. . .

"That was a great win for us," Arizona coach Dick Tomey said. "Ronald Veal made plays like he did last year. He is a natural athlete. He ran and passed well. His performance is a pretty good statement on his abilities."

When asked about Veal's explosive performance offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach Ben Griffith downplayed it somewhat by explaining that, "The offense had one good drive, then our defense played really well. They gave us some turnovers and we capitalized on them."

Veal has had an up-and-down year for an Arizona team that is currently 4-2 overall, 2-1 in Pac-10 Conference play. He started the opener against Oregon State in Corvallis but, after Veal injured his index finger, Bobby Watters started behind center the next Saturday versus Texas Tech.

"It wasn't really serious," Griffith explained, "but it hampered him from taking snaps and Bobby just got on a roll.

"It was kind of a reverse of what happened last week," Griffith added, referring to Watters' shoulder separation in practice last Tuesday.

Watters started the next three games as well until the Wildcats were stunned by a shocking replay of last year.

In 1987, Watters began the year as the starter with Veal, a true freshman, expected to redshirt. When Watters smacked his hand on a UCLA lineman's helmet, breaking his thumb, Veal suddenly found himself thrust into the fray.

As Tomey put it, "Ronald Veal got his college education last year. He expected to be on the sidelines, watching the game with his buddies. Instead, he was in the heat of the battle."

Despite the fact that he had had only a short time to learn Arizona's complicated "Wish and Shoot", a combination of the wishbone and the run-and-shoot, Veal performed heroically.

He set numerous school records, and capped his season by being named the best true freshman quarterback in the nation by The Sporting News.

Chancellor fields student questions at USAC meeting

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

In an effort to provide an exchange of information between himself and student government leaders, Chancellor Charles Young attended the Undergraduate Students Association Council meeting Tuesday night.

Young addressed questions ranging from diversity to students' roles in last week's presidential debate.

Academic Affairs Commissioner Florie Aranovich asked Young what the university is doing to diversify its faculty and graduate student population.

"I don't think we have an ideal situation . . . but it looks again this year that we've made substantial strides in undergraduate diversity," Young said.

Although he did not confirm it, Young said he believes that the university has made a substantial increase in diversifying at the graduate level.

Young also replied that this year has probably been "the best year we've ever had in terms of recruitment of faculty."

Young responded to repeated questions by Cultural Affairs Commissioner Ken Wada regarding the denial of tenure to UCLA Professor Don Nakanishi. He said that the matter is in the "re-review process" and he could not offer information until "all the facts have been presented."

Campus Events Commissioner Greg Ambrose asked the chancellor why students were not given more tickets or allowed to play a bigger role in last week's final presidential debate, held at Pauley Pavilion.

ALEX CASARES/Daily Bruin

Charles Young

The chancellor replied that the ticket situation was not controlled by the university, but by the Commission on Presidential Debates, who sponsored the event.

Young said that since the university was only notified of the debate six days before it was to take place, there was not enough time to have a greater student involvement.

In terms of the university's role in student government, the chancellor said that "the role changes from time to time, given the circumstances that we confront."

Although he did not want to return to the state of the 1950s, where the university played a more parental role, Young felt that UCLA should take a more "pro-active role" than it is currently taking.

Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss questioned Young on the university's commitment to health and seismic safety on campus.

According to Young, the university is using a three-part seismic safety program which involves buildings that are funded from operational income, buildings funded from "some kind of fee," and state-funded buildings.

Young stated that the university is "moving ahead on all three fronts." He said that work will be starting very quickly to improve high-rise residence halls and parking structures.

However, on state-funded buildings, such as Powell library, the university is "struggling" to find funding for the renovations.

"We hope not only to get approval of the next step of funding for Powell, which is our highest priority, in terms of seismic safety, but to get approval for the total program," Young said.

The program would provide "multi-project, multi-year" funding for seismic upgrades and related upgrades.

The chancellor said that if the university does not get state funds for the seismic improvements, the university will undertake one large project a year, or "two, three, or four smaller projects" a year until the problem is resolved.

Young added that UC President David Gardner will be recommending a seismic bond issue for the university for the 1990 election, but said he was unaware of the details.

Soviets visit UCLA as part of first-time student exchange

By Irena Auerbuch, Staff Writer

Mikhail Velikoselsky had lunch in the Rieber Hall cafeteria, strolled around campus, attended a lecture on ecology and the environment, and stopped by the ASUCLA Bookstore.

It could have been a typical day in the life of a UCLA Bruin.

But Velikoselsky is not a Bruin. He is a senior majoring in journalism at Leningrad State University in the Soviet Union.

Velikoselsky was part of a group of nine Leningrad State University students who are visiting the United States for three weeks. The group is scheduled to visit eight University of California campuses and has already visited Washington, D.C. and UC San Diego.

The students spent last Friday touring the UCLA campus and Saturday and Sunday at Universal Studios and Disneyland.

Their visit is the first one of its kind. Previously, the UC Education Abroad Program (UCEAP) has sent American students to the Soviet Union but Soviet students had never been allowed to visit the United States.

This year, a true exchange has taken place. Over the summer, nine UC students visited the Soviet Union, and now nine Soviet students are making their tour of America.

Velikoselsky explained that this is the first time an exchange of this sort has been arranged directly through the governing bodies of Leningrad State University and the University of California. Previously, arrangements were made through foreign ministries in the Soviet Union.

"I have become convinced that students everywhere are the same . . . we have found a common language," Velikoselsky said.

"We have common problems," he continued. "For example, students here have cars and mopeds and our students walk. But there's a joke at our university that if all our students had cars we'd have no place to put them."

The students' reaction to UCLA was extremely positive. While having lunch at the Rieber Hall cafeteria, they marveled at the abundance and quality of the food, particularly at the salad bar and the fresh fruits and vegetables.

When told that American students generally scoff at dorm food, several of the students reacted with disbelief.

"They should be sent to Leningrad State University for a

Biopsy patient shoots at UCLA pathologist

A Panorama City woman apparently upset by the results of her biopsy tried to shoot a UCLA pathologist Wednesday morning, campus police said.

Susan Sawicki, 37, was arrested and booked by the UC Police Department on charges of attempted murder after she allegedly walked into the oral pathology lab at the UCLA School of Dentistry and fired a gunshot at the first employee she saw.

The gunshot did not hit anyone and no one was injured. Sawicki surrendered to police shortly after attempting to shoot the pathologist with a revolver.

Police are withholding the pathologist's name until Friday, when Sawicki is scheduled to face formal charges at her arraignment at the Los Angeles County Municipal Court.

Until then, said UCPD Lt. Alan Cueba, "We consider her a threat to the safety of employees in the area."

Sawicki was placed in the Los Angeles County women's jail Wednesday afternoon and will remain there without bail pending her arraignment, said Rich Elbaum, director of public information at the UCLA Medical Center.

Disputed biopsy

Police said the dentistry department's lab performed an oral biopsy on Sawicki several months ago.

Sawicki was apparently "disgruntled" over the results, according to police reports, and she complained regularly to lab staff. "They had heard from her before in writing," Cueba said.

Biology class offers students field trips for close-up study

By Thanhthuy Nguyen, Contributor

If you're interested in adding variety to your academic life, Biology 21, a course on the natural history of Southern California, may be for you.

The class offers an alternative to passively attending lectures by giving students opportunities to do field work during six afternoon and weekend trips to natural habitats in Southern California.

According to Professor Martin Cody, a former member of the general education advisory committee and Biology 21 instructor, one of the main reasons for bringing the class back is to offer more courses in the biology department that cover topics like ecology and evolution.

He said that Biology 21, Biology 10 (Plants and Civilization), and Biology 13 (The Evolution of Life) were brought back this year after the general education advisory committee concluded that there weren't enough courses in the general education curriculum to satisfy the demands of students.

Cody, who has taught ecology in the biology department for 22 years, describes the course as a "soft ecology" class. "We cut out the part of the class about theories and concentrate more on the field work," he said.

"Field trips are an essential part of this class. The aim is to get students out of the city environment to see plants and animals as they live in their own environment," Cody added.

"To most people, maybe this is the only chance they have to see anything outside of the city boundary," he explained.

"These field trips," he continued, "cover the largest range of natural habitats from the sea to the mountains and to the desert." Some trip sites include the Santa Monica Mountains, the Sierra Nevada Mountains, the Mojave Desert and the beach.

Martha Michel, a senior majoring in sociology, said, "It's good to go on these trips so we can get first hand experience on what we study."

Safina Boruah, a junior in communications, said that she "can relate to the class better because it's about the natural history of California. I find it interesting that we can actually go out and see what the professor is talking about instead of just reading about it in a textbook."

Previously called Field Biology, Biology 21 was taught in the geology department by Clarence Hall Jr., the dean of physical sciences. Because of the difficulty of arranging field trips, the class was canceled 12 years ago and was not reinstated until this year.

"With the current UCLA transportation system, a lot of planning goes into setting up field trips for 35 people," said Cody. "We hope that we can have more students in the class when it is offered in the future."

He added that the biology department hopes to offer Biology 21 once or twice a year.

Women confront tough fight with alcohol addiction

By Lisa Luboff
Contributor

At least 10 percent of the students on the UCLA campus are drug or alcohol addicts, according to Cece Freeman, Substance Abuse Prevention Program Coordinator at UCLA Student Health Services.

Freeman brought two young women to speak about their alcohol and drug experiences at a panel presentation Tuesday evening at Alpha Chi Omega sorority. Entitled "Alcohol and Drugs: Effects on College Women," the program was in conjunction with Alcohol Awareness Week, but was restricted to Alpha Chi Omega members only.

Twenty similar programs and panels, some with recovering alcohol and drug addicts, are being held this week in the residence halls, according to Freeman, as part of the week's events.

"The main goals of this evening are to talk about a little more of the negative consequences of drinking," said Freeman at the opening of the presentation.

"Drinking in a low risk situation is not the issue," said Freeman. "There is a physiological response that occurs to addicts . . . that pull is so strong. One of the sad parts of addiction is that the only way to tell if someone is a cocaine or alcohol addict is when their life is falling apart.

"Probably the nicest thing you could do for a friend is to break that denial (by telling them)." said Freeman.

She also noted that counseling and support groups are available for drug and alcohol addicts and adult children of alcoholics. "Our goal here is to try and minimize the risks that can hap-

CTO discontinues sale of Mann theater tickets

By Keith Roberts
Contributor

The days of buying reduced-priced Mann movie tickets at UCLA's Central Ticket Office have come to an end.

Since last week, CTO no longer sells $3.10-discount tickets for Mann Theatres. UCLA students, faculty and staff will instead have to start paying the regular $6 admission price.

According to CTO supervisor Dave Lowenstein, "we just couldn't come to a reasonable agreement with the Mann Theatres chain" to acquire discount tickets.

Lowenstein believes that Mann thought the discounted service was cutting in on the theater chain's Westwood receipts.

Officials from the theater chain could not be reached for comment at press time.

Although Mann discount tickets are no longer sold, they are still honored at the theaters.

Only Mann tickets have been discontinued, and movie tickets from the Pacific, Avco, United Artists, General Cinema and Laemmle theater chains are still available at discount prices at CTO's West Center outlet, Lowenstein said. The discount prices are $3.60 for Pacific and $3.10 for the other chains, while regular admission for all theaters is $6.

According to Lowenstein, CTO is in the process of negotiating a discount-ticket agreement with the AMC theater chain.

CTO offers a variety of film, theater, concert, dance performance and other cultural event tickets for the UCLA community at discounted prices.

semester — then they'd appreciate what they have more," said one student.

Other students were awed at the major and not-so-major technological and electronic gadgets at the disposal of American students. The profusion of computers and telephones proved particularly mesmerizing.

"I have a telephone in my dorm room and it causes a furor all over the residence hall," said Oleg Prosypkin, an economics major, commenting on the two telephones he saw while visiting a room in the Saxon Suites.

Many students expressed amazement and curiosity about the computer system used by the Daily Bruin. Velikoselsky said the student newspaper at Leningrad State University does not have a computer system and that all the material must be typewritten.

In spite of seeming differences between Soviet and American lifestyles, the students expressed optimism about the Soviet political and economic system.

They were particularly optimistic about the Soviet government's new policy of glasnost or openness.

"There have been major changes in regard to free speech," commented Maria Sytueva. "The feeling seems to be that once the people's mouth is open, it is difficult to close it up again."

Sytueva added that there are other changes occurring in the Soviet system as well. Cooperatives, family-run cafes, restaurants or clothing manufacturers with restrictions on size and the amount of labor they can employ, have made a comeback.

Cooperatives were last seen during Lenin's New Economic Policy (NEP) in the 1920s and were the closest a socialist society could come to free enterprise. Stalin completely nation-

Visit uncovers tremendous differences

By Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writer

"It's pretty much like going back in time to what I imagine America to have been like right after World War II," senior Andy Sudol said in describing his three-week trip to the Soviet Union.

Sudol, a political science/Russian civilization major, traveled to the Soviet Union with nine students from different UC campuses and a faculty sponsor as part of a University of California Education Abroad Program (UC-EAP).

This is the first year that UC-EAP has implemented an actual exchange program with Leningrad State University which sends UC students to the Soviet Union and gives Soviet students an opportunity to visit and learn about the United States.

Sudol returned with positive and negative memories of the Soviet Union. They range from visiting Lenin's mausoleum to trading tie-dyed T-shirts with black marketeers, from observing changes wrought by new govermental policies to attending a party, Soviet-style.

"Meeting the students (at the University of Leningrad) and having a party at a student's apartment was actually my best memory. It was very informal. There was lots of vodka, lots of food," Sudol recalled.

"The Russian people are very generous; they go totally out of their way to make people feel at home. Americans aren't exactly like that. It's a very Eastern European thing."

Another distinction between Americans and Russians observed by Sudol is that the "people (in the Soviet Union) are really serious. They're very quiet; when they talk to each other in the streets or in public, it's in very low tones. You don't see them smiling.

"They have much more to worry about," Sudol continued. "Their lives are more difficult. They have to worry about what stores will have food, what lines they'll have to stand in."

The Russian people seem to treat Glasnost and Perestroika, Mikhail Gorbachev's new policies of openness and restructuring, with some skepticism, Sudol observed. "They know that in order for the system to become more efficient drastic changes are necessary.

"(The Soviets) think that the changes that have happened so far are a drop in the bucket and that these changes can easily be taken back — such as the one loosening restrictions on censorship," he added.

Several students from the University of Leningrad were afraid of talking to foreigners in spite of all the changes, Sudol recalled. "They were afraid that someone would tell their superiors what they were doing and that it would hinder advancing their careers in the future."

Sudol thinks the changes are "pretty drastic. There is public voicing of problems. Now you can

Germans, Americans receive Nobel prizes

By Arthur Max, Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Three Americans won the Nobel Prize in physics Wednesday for their work with subatomic particles, and three West Germans shared the chemistry prize for unraveling a mystery of photosynthesis.

Americans Leon Lederman, Melvin Schwartz and Jack Steinberger shared the physics prize for capturing neutrinos in a high energy beam to probe the stucture of atomic particles.

Chemists Johann Deisenhofer, Robert Huber and Hartmut Michel of West Germany were honored for discoveries that may be critical in harnessing the sun's energy. They were rewarded for work completed only three years ago, indicating the importance attached to their breakthrough by the awarding committee of the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences.

Many recipients wait decades for recognition.

Committee chairman Bo Malmstrom said their work was an essential step toward artificial photosynthesis, which scientists hope will provide the key to converting the sun's energy to man's needs.

"The only way in the long run to solve the energy problem of the world is to utilize solar energy," Malmstrom said.

Although it had no immediate practical application, the academy said the research had importance beyond the study of photosynthesis, the process of converting sunlight into energy.

It said the research could be used in understanding central biological functions, including the transport of chemical substances between cells, hormone action and nerve impulses.

The physics award also was for basic research with no practical use as yet, said Bengt Nagel, secretary of the academy's physics committee.

"Some day, some kid who is now in high school will find out how to use this information to bring benefits to society," said Lederman.

The physicists discovered a way to concentrate neutrinos by the hundreds of billions into a beam capable of probing the in-

UNITED NATIONS — North Korea Wednesday proposed creating a new nation out of North and South Korea, with a shared military command and a national assembly comprised of an equal number of representatives from each side.

The North's deputy foreign minister, Kang Sok Ju, suggested the new nation would be called the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo.

Kang told the General Assembly that "there is no hidden attempt to insinuate 'unification through communization' and no intention to impose our ideas and system on the other side."

He said peaceful reunification is possible if each side respects the other's ideology and that the new state would retain the separate social systems of the communist North and pro-Western South.

South Korea's U.N. Mission said in a statement, "We think the North Korean delegation's speech this morning appears to be a compilation of their past proposals. Our president yesterday (Tuesday) suggested all those proposals of North and South Korea be discussed at the summit talks between the two parts of Korea."

South Korea's president, Roh Tae-woo, addressed the Assembly on Tuesday.

The authorities of "Koryo" would found and run joint companies and common markets and

Pentagon bars contractor from bidding

WASHINGTON — The Sundstrand Corp., named last week in a huge defense fraud case, has been suspended temporarily from competing for or receiving any government contracts, the Pentagon said Wednesday.

"The suspension is temporary pending completion of legal proceedings against Sundstrand Corp.," the Pentagon said in a statement.

The suspension was announced by the Defense Logistics Agency but applies to all government agencies. It does not affect existing contracts held by the corporation, based in Rockford, Ill.

Sundstrand spokesman Claude Vernam was not immediately available for comment, said his secretary, Karen Lowe.

The Pentagon said the suspension applied to the parent corporation as well as six subsidiaries — Sundstrand Data Control Inc.; the Falk Corp.; Sundstrand Heat Transfer Inc.; Sundstrand Service Corp.; the Sullair Corp., and Signatron Inc.

Sundstrand, a large manufacturer of electronic, mechanical and hydraulic systems, on Oct. 12 agreed to pay a $115 million settlement to the government in what was described as the largest single fraud settlement in history.

The U.S. attorney in Chicago, Anton Valukas, said a federal investigation determined the company had been overbilling the Defense Department for airplane parts for years and also had been submitting claims for such things as babysitting expenses, country clubs and servants for its executives.

Offices allotted funds amid dissent

By Holly Bauer

USAC

Finance committee recommendations at Tuesday's Undergraduate Students Association Council meeting led to disagreement among council members.

Despite dissent from council members Jason Weiss, Mike Spence and Mark Jessee, the Cultural Affairs Commission and Campus Events were allotted funds for accomodations at a November programming convention.

The council's vote approved $213 to provide one hotel room for the two groups to share for the three nights of the conference.

Ken Wada, cultural affairs commissioner, and Greg Ambrose, campus events commissioner, had mixed feelings about the decision.

Cultural Affairs requested $463, and only received $213. Last week, Campus Events was not allotted any of the funds it requested for the event.

Money was budgeted for two people from each group to attend the conference at $125 per person.

Ambrose questioned Finance Committee Chair Mark Arvizu at the meeting on why he had now decided to recommend the allocations.

"I don't want to answer the question," Arvizu said, explaining that Ambrose could have asked him before the meeting.

When USA President Michael Meehan told Arvizu that he had to answer Ambrose's question, the Finance Committee chair said that more documents had been presented, which allowed him to reconsider the allocations.

Wada said, "The hotel room is key to the function of this conference. It should be seen as an investment. This is where we can coordinate with other Southern California schools . .

UCSA member asked about affirmative action

By Holly Bauer, Staff Writer

An Undergraduate Students Association Council member questioned University of California Student Association Representative Bruce Cowan about his stand on affirmative action at Tuesday's meeting.

Academic Affairs Commissioner Florie Aranovich questioned Cowan after he gave a report to the council on UCSA's last meeting. She said she was concerned because he abstained in a vote on the UCSA agenda for the year, which included affirmative action.

Aranovich said, "I feel (Cowan) was portraying UCLA as being anti-affirmative action. It is very clear that UCLA is not affirmative action."

Cowan said that he "withheld because of personal reasons."

Lecture to probe mysteries of India's great epic

By M. Radevich, Staff Writer

India's great epic, the "Mahabbarata," holds that centuries ago The Lord Krishna foresaw a calamity leading to the submergence of his city, Dwarka. Yet proof of the city's existence has eluded archaeologists for the past 50 years.

Are the events in the epic truth or myth? Was Krishna a real person? Are there traces of the city he built submerged off the west coast of India?

These questions will be addressed by Professor S.R. Rao, of the National Institute of Oceanography in India, in a lecture called "The Lost City of Dwarka: Marine Archaeologists Discover the Legendary 3500 year old city in the Arabian Sea."

A team of archaeologists led by Rao unearthed the remains of a city beneath the Arabian Sea, off the modern-day town of Dwarka. The remains include fortwalls, docks, temples and other buildings as well as a variety of pottery.

Expert talks on how to pick a president

UCLA seminar also examines attitudes toward presidency

By Catherine Mitchell and Thanh Nhan
Contributors

Are you wondering what Americans expect from a new president?

UCLA Extension is holding a series, which began Tuesday, aimed at answering questions about the American presidency. It is offered as part of the University Continuing Education Project in Public Affairs (UCEPPA). The program has been held every presidential election year since 1960.

Among the issues to be addressed are what Americans expect from a president and what makes a candidate qualified for the job. The purpose of the seminar is to offer "a better understanding of the institution of the presidency," said Elizabeth Brooks, the program's originator.

Thomas Cronin, a former White House aide and a frequent guest on talk shows as a political analyst, was the speaker in the first lecture. His lecture was entitled, "Presidential Leadership: What Should We Be Looking For?" Cronin has written several books on the presidency including "Rethinking the Presidency."

Cronin talked about the attitudes of American people towards the upcoming presidential election. He summed up the apparent apathy of many college students by quoting from a T-shirt worn by one student: "I support a two party system, one for Friday and one for Saturday."

According to Cronin, one of the factors that contributed to Dukakis' lag in the polls is his failure to appeal to college-age voters. Cronin also predicted that Bush would win the election with a comfortable lead. Cronin attributes Bush's lead to the public's fear of jeopardizing the peace and prosperity that presently prevails.

While many people judge the candidates of this election by their "presidential" appearance, Cronin asserts that no candidate in history has ever looked "presidential" before he came into office.

Cronin said the ideal leader possesses paradoxical qualities. He is gentle but cunning and decisive, above politics yet a great politician, inspirational yet a realist, and is like us — yet better than us. He is supposed to make Americans set their sights higher, to "unlock the talent of a nation."

In practical terms this means a president who is a good negotiator and who will make the presidency a source of information for the American people. According to Cronin, he must have the necessary drive yet not be driven by ambition.

Cronin said that America needs a balance of leadership between the president and the American people to create cooperative governing. Cronin said if leadership "wells up from the people" then it is necessary for the people to become better informed.

Cronin calls for public participation in politics in order to create a country with a good leader and an active citizenry. According to Cronin, this creates yet another paradox.

> '(Dukakis and Bush) are not the best candidates we have ever had, but maybe we aren't the best citizenry . . .'
> — Thomas Cronin

"Strong leaders make for a weak people; we yearn for leadership, but we also yearn to be free and left alone," he said.

Cronin urged the public not to judge the candidates. "Let's not be too harsh . . . (Dukakis and Bush) are not the best candidates we have ever had, but maybe we are not the best citizenry we ever had or could be," he said.

The audience's response to Cronin was mixed, but enthusiastic about the series. "I thought it was great! He was really entertaining. I think he was kind of critical of everything . . . I didn't appreciate him putting down the public . . . I don't think it's wrong to expect a lot from the candidates," said Nisha Mody, a high school senior.

Although approximately 200 people attended Tuesday's class, there is still space available to those who are interested. The class is $20 without credit and $100 for those who wish to receive credit.

In subsequent weeks, speakers will give an overview of the Reagan legacy, and the president's relationship with Congress and the public. Among those who are scheduled to speak in the following weeks are Nelson Polsby, director of the Institute for Governmental Studies and professor of political science at UC Berkeley and Robert Shogan, national political correspondent for the Los Angeles Times. The last class will be a panel discussion of what can be expected from the new presidency.

The host of the program, former UCLA Extension Dean Leonard Freedman said that the program can "increase the level of public interest in major issues of our time."

In order to raise public concern, UCEPPA, founded by Freedman, is coordinating a series of seminars in universities around the country to address the issue of public awareness about the presidency. Through the program, people can learn about aspects of the presidency that "most people don't have access to."

"The American Presidency: A Question of Leadership," which began Tuesday, will be held on four Tuesdays and one Monday, with no class during election week. Classes will be held in 147 Dodd Hall from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and students with I.D. will be admitted free on a space-available basis.

For more information, call Extension's humanities, sciences and social sciences department at 825-2272.

Not everyone is cut out to change the world. After all, it takes education, skills and a spare two years.
Also a willingness to work. Hard.
This year 3,750 Americans will join the Peace Corps to do just that. They'll do things like build roads, plant forests and crops, teach English, develop small businesses, train community health workers, or even coach basketball. However, what they'll be doing isn't half as important as the fact that they'll be changing a little piece of the world . . . for the better.
And when they return, these 3,750 Americans will find that experience doing hard work will have another benefit. It's exactly what their next employers are looking for.
So, give the Peace Corps your next two years. And while you're out changing the world, you'll also be making a place in it for yourself.

Scientists close in on discovering way to predict quakes

By Lee Siegel
Associated Press

Soviet and California scientists, including some from UCLA, say they moved closer to predicting strong earthquakes by developing a mathematical formula that showed how certain seismic patterns preceded 16 of 20 big jolts in historic times.

"This is a step toward improving the prediction of large earthquakes in time and space," said geophysicist Leon Knopoff, a geophysics professor here, and a co-author of the study being published Thursday in the British journal Nature.

The new method has not yet been used to predict earthquakes and will not allow scientists to predict that a quake will occur in a precise time and place.

But it will allow them to make medium-range predictions, saying that a strong earthquake is likely within three years somewhere in a broad region, such as Southern California or the Northern Appalachians, Knopoff said Wednesday.

That would be an improvement over scientists' existing ability, which is mostly limited to making long-range quake forecasts.

For example, the U.S. Geological Survey predicted in July that within 30 years, a major or great quake measuring 7 to 8 or more on the Richter scale is 60 percent likely on the San Andreas Fault in Southern California or on the Hayward or San Andreas faults in the San Francisco Bay area.

Knopoff conducted the study with Vgonir Keilis-Borok and I.M. "Irra" Rotwain, both of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, and California Institute of Technology geophysicist-geologist Clarence Allen, the former chairman of the National Earthquake Prediction Evaluation Council.

If the new method is proven valid, it will help government officials and citizens because "even a vague description of the area that could be at risk and a refinement in the time scale is valuable," said Mike Guerin, spokesman for California's Office of Emergency Services.

Knowing that a big quake is likely within a certain number of years in a certain region "sets a deadline in which they need to accomplish certain preparations and plans," he added.

The Soviet-UCLA-Caltech team devised a complicated mathematical formula to identify "times of increased probability" — roughly three-year periods in which certain patterns of seismic activity are likely to culminate in a strong earthquake.

They developed the formula by studying seismic patterns that preceded 14 strong earthquakes that rocked California and Nevada between 1938 and 1984 and that measured 6.4 or more on the Richter scale.

The scientists then tested the formula by applying it to 20 quakes in five other regions of the world since 1963. They found the formula, used in hindsight, successfully "predicted" 16 of those quakes.

The patterns incorporated into the formula included above- or below-normal numbers of smaller jolts, the rate at which such quakes increased or decreased, the size of those smaller quakes, the number of aftershocks following such quakes and whether such quakes in one area were followed immediately by quakes in a distant area.

Immigrants' rights not violated, board finds

The Associated Press

FALLS CHURCH, Va. — The constitutional rights of eight Los Angeles-area immigrants accused of belonging to a Marxist faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization were not violated during their deportation proceeding, an immigrations appeals board has ruled.

The unanimous decision made public Tuesday by the four-member Board of Immigration Appeals rejected the immigrants' argument that they were subjected to double jeopardy when the government stopped, then restarted their deportation hearing in Los Angeles last year.

The board ordered the suspended hearing should resume.

The immigrants were arrested in January 1987 and originally charged under the McCarran-Walter Act with advocating world communism because of their alleged ties to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a PLO faction. The immigrants denied the accusation.

The government then modified its charges, accusing two of the eight with subversion and trying to deport the other six on various immigration violations.

The immigration judge threw out all the charges May 11, 1987, when the government refused to produce as a witness a key immigration official who signed the original arrest warrants.

The next day, the government refiled the charges with the signature of a different immigration official.

Defense attorneys appealed on the grounds that restarting the hearing was double jeopardy.

But the immigration appeals board said prosecutors were "not attempting to 'start over,'" but rather "corrected" the signature on the arrest orders.

Attorneys for the immigrants said they are considering whether to appeal the board's decision.

Reagan lashes out at Dukakis as liberal

By Merrill Hartson
Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — President Reagan said Wednesday that Americans will put George Bush in the White House because he's running against a Democratic ticket whose liberal positions "only a McGovern could love."

In a speech prepared for delivery at Ohio State University, Reagan said the Democratic ticket of Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen would pursue policies detrimental to economic growth and the nation's defense.

Using the word "liberal" 15 times in a speech planned for 15 minutes, the president also lashed out at Sen. Howard Katzenbaum, D-Ohio, as a big spender, and urged his defeat by Republican challenger George Voinovich, mayor of Cleveland.

"When it comes to big spending, the National Taxpayers Union has given him their 'Big Spenders' award," Reagan said of Metzenbaum, who has vigorously opposed many administration policies.

From Columbus, Reagan heads to Bowling Green for another rally with the Bush-Quayle ticket and then to Cincinnati to address a fund-raising dinner in Voinovich's honor.

Reagan returned to the same state — with its 23 electoral votes — where he took an old-fashioned whistlestop tour through towns and countryside on the "Heartland Special" during his 1984 re-election campaign.

Without naming Dukakis, Reagan likened the Democratic standard-bearer to liberal former Sen. George McGovern, D-South Dakota, who lost to President Nixon by a landslide in 1972.

"My friends, everything that you and I and George Bush have worked for these last eight years — everything — could be lost faster than you can say the Pledge of Allegiance," he said. "The liberals talk about reaching for the center but, from the economy to national defense, they've taken positions only a McGovern could love."

Noting last week's Bush-Dukakis debate, Reagan said that "I don't often feel sorry for liberals, but I came close.

"I couldn't help thinking, the problem with those fellows on the other side is not camera angles or lighting. It's not whether their candidate is likable or not," the president said.

"No, it's the very thing that they've spent this campaign trying desperately to hide . . . they're out of the mainstream of American politics."

Newsman wounded in demonstration

American photographer shot by Israeli soldiers during cross-fire

By Dan Horn
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — An American news photographer said Wednesday that Israeli soldiers who shot him during a stone-throwing clash Tuesday were not in physical danger when they opened fire.

Neal Cassidy, a photographer for the Oakland, Calif.-based Frontline newspaper, was the first journalist shot in the 10-month-old Palestinian uprising.

Cassidy, who is in good condition at a hospital in Arab east Jerusalem, was shot in the right knee with a plastic bullet during a Palestinian demonstration in Nablus.

He said soldiers opened fire after a group of five or six Palestinian youths began shouting and throwing stones at them. He said the demonstrators were about 150 yards from the soldiers.

"That's a pretty good distance," Cassidy said from his hospital bed. "They were throwing stones in the direction of the soldiers, but they were too far to reach.

"I didn't have the sense that they (the soldiers) were in any physical danger. There was no physical threat."

A photograph Cassidy said he took moments before he was shot showed five soldiers, one with his gun raised, standing in the street where the incident took place.

The photo also showed a young man standing behind the soldiers preparing to throw a stone.

Army regulations allow soldiers to open real ammunition fire only if their lives are in danger. However, trained troopers may fire plastic bullets for riot dispersal, even if the soldiers are not endangered.

An army spokesman said Tuesday that troops fired in Nablus while being stoned, adding that Cassidy "endangered himself" by being close to the rioters in an area the military had ordered closed to outsiders.

A 5-year-old boy and a teenager were killed in West Bank clashes Tuesday.

Cassidy, 37, of Oakland, said he refused to go to a Jewish hospital for treatment when Israeli authorities asked him to transfer from an Arab clinic after the attack.

"I told them I had seen enough of their hospitality," he said. "First they shoot me and then they want to take me to their hospital. I said 'No thanks.'"

On Wednesday, Palestinian patients at the hospital, several of whom said they were injured in the uprising, visited Cassidy and exchanged words of support. One Arab patient said: "This place is not safe . . . it is like Beruit."

Cassidy said he has been in the country for about three weeks working on a story about Palestinians living under Israeli occupation. He said he will check out of the hospital in a few days and probably will stay in Israel for another two weeks.

Initiative would allow senior citizens to keep low tax assessments

By Jennifer Kerr
Associated Press

Propositions '88

Proposition 90:

Would allow people over 55 to transfer their Proposition 13 tax assessment to a new home in another county, if the new county approves.

SACRAMENTO — Voters in November will decide if senior citizens who move to another county should be able to take their low, Proposition 13 property tax assessments with them.

Proposition 90, designed to encourage seniors to sell their large family homes and move to a smaller dwelling, would expand a constitutional amendment that voters approved two years ago.

"By approving Proposition 90, we can help increase our senior citizens' freedom to live where they choose and help more young families have the opportunity to achieve the American dream of home ownership," say the arguments by the backers.

The chief backer is Assemblyman Dave Elder, D-Los Angeles, author of both this measure and the 1986 one. Also signing the arguments were Sen. Cecil Green, D-Norwalk, and Josephine Barbano of the American Association of Retired Persons.

The opponents, San Jose attorney Gary Wesley and Pebbles Trippet of San Francisco Grassroots, say the problem is Proposition 13 itself, which has major flaws that should be addressed in a comprehensive manner rather than tinkering with it only for seniors.

In 1978, voters approved Proposition 13, which drastically changed California's property tax laws. It limited the assessed value of property to its 1975-76 assessed value, increased by up to 2 percent a year. But when property changes ownership or undergoes new construction, the property is reappraised to the current fair market value.

Proposition 90 is 'a scam letting a fortunate few avoid normal taxes. The wealthiest benefit most; the poor not at all.'

— Pebbles Trippet

Thus, two neighbors with similar homes could be paying very different property taxes. One neighbor who had lived in the home since before 1978 could be paying taxes on the 1975-76 assessed value of, say, $30,000, while the neighbor who moved there in 1982 could be paying taxes on the 1982 purchase price of $100,000.

Voters in 1986 approved Elder's Proposition 60, which allows an exemption to the reappraisal requirement for homeowners over the age of 55 who buy a new residence within two years in the same county. Those taxpayers can transfer the adjusted base-year value of their original home to their new one, thus keeping their property tax payments from increasing.

Proposition 90 would extend this same special treatment to homeowners who buy replacement homes in other counties. However, each county's supervisors would have to pass an ordinance allowing such transfers into that county. For example, a Los Angeles County homeowner moving to Lake County to retire could transfer the base-year value of the Los Angeles house only if Lake County supervisors had adopted an ordinance permitting such transfers.

If voters approve Proposition 90, the Legislature would have to pass a law putting it into effect. Elder had such a bill this year, but it was not approved by lawmakers; they could pass a bill next year.

In their ballot arguments, Elder, Green and Barbano said counties would be able to decide if approving such moves would cost them property tax revenues. They might also consider "the benefits that seniors can bring to their communities," they wrote.

Wesley, a San Jose attorney who frequently writes ballot arguments against measures that have no other opposition, also had opposed Proposition 60. He argues that the real problem is the reassessment section of Proposition 13, which makes people with similar houses pay vastly different property taxes.

"Instead of offering voters an amendment to Proposition 13 which would correct these inequities, the Legislature proposes in this measure to retain the basic flaw but permit counties to exempt a relatively small number of persons from the unfair tax burden the automatic reassessment provision places upon new owners and renters of residential property," he wrote.

Pebbles Trippet of San Francisco Grassroots also criticizes Proposition 13. Trippet says if income taxes were levied using the same principle, "you'd pay based on your income when you started your present job. Every April 15th, you'd file your 1975 tax over again — unless you changed jobs (then you'd pay based on current income)."

Proposition 90, says Trippet, is "a scam letting a fortunate few avoid normal taxes. The wealthiest benefit most; the poor not at all."

An Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee analysis of Elder's measure said that a sample of one-third of the Santa Clara County homeowners taking advantage of Proposition 60 showed an average selling price of $275,000, compared to the countywide average home selling price of $173,000.

Proposition 90 is also supported by the American Association of Retired Persons and California Association of Realtors. The only other opponent is the California Taxpayers Association.

It was put on the ballot by the Legislature as Elder's ACA1, which was approved with votes of 36-0 in the Senate and 77-1 in the Assembly. The only no vote was Assemblyman John Vasconcellos, D-San Jose.

Military, civilians at odds over staff cuts

By Norman Black
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Pentagon military leaders are resisting suggested cuts of up to 3,500 jobs that civilian defense officials claim can be eliminated without harming security.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff is arguing that no more than 500 positions should be cut from U.S. military commands worldwide, while civilian manpower authorities believe the figure should be between 3,000 and 3,500, officials said Tuesday.

The two sides are "not even close" to agreement on a figure, said one official, who spoke on condition he not be identified. "The military guys are already starting to cry that they can't do more with less."

Sources said the dispute is scheduled to be resolved by Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci and to be reflected in the fiscal 1990 budget when it is submitted to Congress in January.

"You can be sure that Carlucci is going to force more than 500 cuts out of the military, but it's hard to predict how many more," said one source.

"And since it's a lame-duck budget submission, his decision may or may not hold," added another official. "He is serious about this, though."

The current fight dates to an internal study ordered by Carlucci last December, shortly after he assumed the post of defense secretary.

The study was performed by a 22-member panel chaired by Derek J. Vander Schaaf, the Pentagon's deputy inspector general. In unusually blunt terms, it concluded in February the Pentagon could eliminate 7,309 jobs from headquarters around the world — or 12 percent of the total — without jeopardizing readiness.

Such cuts would save more than $300 million a year in operating costs and eliminate duplication that in some cases almost guarantees America's military corps will have a hard time fighting any war, the study asserted.

SOVIETS: Impressions

alized Soviet industry, however, placing the reigns of economic control entirely in the hands of the government.

With the advent of cooperatives, Sytueva explained, there are more consumer goods on the market, although they may be expensive and of poor quality.

Daria Sinitzina, a geology major, commented that although America is ahead in technological advances, Soviet students lead more culturally aware lives.

"The government subsidizes opera and theater tickets for students," she said. "We go to the theater or the opera several times a month. How many times do American students go? It's monstrously expensive here."

Other aspects of student life were similar; the Soviet students said they listened to Bruce Springsteen and Peter Gabriel; that chewing gum was being manufactured and sold in the Soviet Union; and that jeans were extremely popular in Leningrad.

Several students remarked that recently a great deal of positive articles have appeared in the Soviet press about the United States and that they appreciated the chance to go and see for themselves.

Sinitzina said that she received a "marvelous impression of California. (Before leaving for America), I read that California is the golden state, a country of Nobel prizes, scenic harbors and handsome naval officers.

"I love the climate, the people — everyone is very friendly," she continued. "The equipment used in the universities is amazing. We visited a geology lab at UC San Diego and I was just standing there with my mouth gaping open."

Sytueva interjected that Leningrad State University was beginning to adopt a computer system for student records and that the new system posed both advantages and disadvantages.

Commenting on other differences between UCLA and Leningrad State University, student Irina Kurilova said, "The university (UCLA) is more convenient. There are computers in the rooms, which to us is amazing . . . it is also easier to interact with the professors."

Sinitzina said she would like very much to come to America for a semester or a year to study. "These are the best years to do it, while you are still a student. These are the most interesting years," she said.

"Unfortunately, we are separated by many thousands of miles," Velikoselsky said. "But I could come here and see for myself that there are excellent guys and girls among Americans, that we have a lot in common. What I am going to tell people (in the Soviet Union) when I return will be more powerful than newspapers and television because I am a living witness.

"Although our countries have different political viewpoints, we share one earth and many common problems," he added.

UNIFICATION: 2 Koreas

encourage the formation of a new national economy for the entire peninsula, said Kang.

A unified Korea would "not only leave intact the capital invested by other nations in South Korea prior to reunification and continue to ensure their concessions, but also promote new investments of foreign capital," said Kang.

"Koryo" would have a unified military command, abolish former military alliances and treaties, and dissolve the demarcation line dividing North and South, he said.

The new nation would be the sole representative of the peninsula in diplomatic relations with other nations and would hold one seat in the United Nations, he added.

Both Koreas currently hold non-voting observer status in the General Assembly.

"Koryo" would be a neutral, non-aligned nation, and the peninsula would become a nuclear-weapon-free zone and ban the presence of foreign troops, Kang said.

About 42,000 American troops are stationed in South Korea.

Vernon Walters, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, called it a "thoughtful, if not arresting speech."

"I don't think there were any new elements except the tone; the tone was considerably more conciliatory," said Walters.

On Tuesday, Roh proposed a summit between the leaders of North and South and the signing of a non-aggression pact by the bitter rivals.

Roh said a summit with North Korea's President Kim Il-sung would "resolve all the problems raised by either or both sides with regard to disarmament, arms control and other military matters."

Roh also pledged that "the Republic of Korea will never use force first against the North."

Kang agreed with Roh that a summit would have to adopt a non-aggression pact, but he said the summit also would have to cover the issue of reunification.

If the South is not ready to discuss reunificaton, said Kang, senior officials could at least meet to hold talks aimed at easing military tensions as a step toward eventual "top level talks."

A representative from the North suggested the unified state would retain the separate social systems of the North and South.

He also said the United States and North Korea should sign a peace agreement that would result in the withdrawal of U.S. troops from the South, a phased demilitarization of the peninsula, and the estabishment of a nuclear-free zone.

Roh also proposed the two Koreas meet with United States, Soviet Union, China and Japan to prepare the groundwork for peace and security measures throughout northeast Asia. He did not offer specifics.

Allies of the United States and South Korea should "contribute to the progress and opening of North Korea by engaging Pyongyang in expanding relations," the president told the 159-member world body.

Relations between North Korea and the United States never have gone beyond the symbolic since 1945, when the Korean peninsula was divided between North and South Korea.

The Koreas hold U.N. non-voting observer status because they still technically are at war. The 1950-1953 Korean War ended in an armistice and no peace treaty was signed.

On Thursday, Roh meets President Reagan in Washington. The South Korean leader is expected to ask Washington to improve its relations with North Korea.

S. Korea urges U.S. to improve ties with North

By Paul Shin
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea will call on the United States to improve relations with communist North Korea in conjunction with similar moves by the Soviet Union and its allies to thaw ties with Seoul, officials said.

South Korean President Roh Tae-woo, scheduled to meet today at the White House with President Reagan, "will formally urge the United States to take broad measures as soon as possible to improve ties with North Korea," one government official said.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Roh will brief Reagan on his new peace initiatives on the Korean peninsula and thank him for Washington's support for a successful hosting of the Seoul Olympics.

The United States beefed up its military presence in and around the Korean peninsula during the Seoul Olympics and warned North Korea against disrupting the Games, which Pyongyang unsuccessfully sought to co-host. The Games ended without incident on Oct. 2.

In a related development, North Korea today proposed creating a new nation out of North and South Korea, with a shared military command and a national assembly comprised of an equal number of representatives from each side. The North's deputy foreign minister, Kang Sok Ju, suggested the new nation would be called the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo and would allow the separate social systems of North and South to remain in tact.

His proposal came one day after Roh called for a summit meeting with North Korea's president to sign a non-aggression pact. North Korea and South Korea have been bitter enemies since the division of the Korean peninsula in 1945.

Relations between the United States and North Korea have never developed beyond the symbolic stage. The United States fought for South Korea in a three-year war against the North Koreans in the early 1950s.

As a conciliatory gesture, the United States allowed limited contact with North Korea in early 1987 but revoked the decision last year after the communist Asian state was implicated in the November bombing of a South Korean commercial jet with 115 people on board near Burma.

South Korea, the official said, now hopes the United States will change its policy again, easing visa restrictions and allowing limited personnel and trade contacts with North Korea.

Such conciliatory U.S. gestures are necessary to bolster Roh's initiatives to improve relations with North Korea, the official said.

Roh on Tuesday told the U.N. General Assembly that South Korea is ready to end its rivalry and confrontation with North Korea and would not oppose its allies improving ties with North Korea.

"It is also our position that those socialist countries with close ties to North Korea continue to maintain positive relations and cooperate with North Korea even as they improve relations with us," Roh added.

It is unclear how far South Korea wants the United States to go to improve ties with North Korea, but the official said, "We want the policies of our allies commensurate with moves by countries allied with the north."

PRIZE: Physics, chemistry

ner parts of protons in the same way an X-ray penetrates the human body, the academy said.

Neutrinos are extremely tiny particles — even on the subatomic scale — with no electrical charge. They interact very weakly with other forms of matter and could easily pass through a layer of lead trillions of miles thick without being diverted from their course, according to the Nobel citation.

"The work was the first pioneering effort to essentially put together an experiment in which neutrinos ... which very rarely interact in matter at all ... interact," said Schwartz, awakened with the news at his home in San Francisco.

The physicists also were cited for discovering the muon neutrino.

The academy said their work "opened entirely new opportunities for research into the innermost structure and dynamics of matter."

Schwartz, 55, who left physics to run his own company specializing in computer communication, came up with the idea to use a neutron beam to study radioactive decay after other types of beams failed to work.

Schwartz once wrote that he discussed the problem with some colleagues during a coffee break in 1959, but they were left stymied.

"That night it came to me. It was incredibly simple. All we had to do was to usenputrinos," he wrote in a scientific journal.

The prize-winning experiment "was completed and published in 1961. Those poor guys in Stockholm have been puzzling over it ever since and finally decided it was good stuff," said Lederman, 66, director of the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory in Batavia, Ill.

Steinberger, 67, a German-born naturalized American, said he had given up hope of winning.

"It was not such that you immediately had to give it a Nobel Prize. I would have thought it would be honored that way at one time or another, but I had given up," he said at an interview at the CERN research laboratory in Geneva, Switzerland, where he works.

– The three were faculty members at Columbia University at the time of their research.

Condition of ailing Emperor Hirohito worse, officials say

The Associated Press

TOKYO — The condition of Emperor Hirohito worsened Wednesday as he coughed up blood for the first time since his intestinal hemorrhaging began a month ago, Imperial Household officials said.

The 87-year-old monarch was resting after doctors gave him transfusions of nearly 2 pints of blood that stabilized his condition, they said.

Kyodo News Service reported the emperor's daughter, Atsuko Ikeda, said he was awake but hardly responded to her when she visited him.

Mrs. Ikeda told reporters her father coughed repeatedly during her five-minute visit to his bedside in the Imperial Palace, the report said.

His temperature was 99.3, compared with his normal reading of about 95.9, they said.

The internal hemorrhaging began Sept. 19. Since then, he has received transfusions of more than twice the normal amount of blood in his body.

In recent days, Hirohito ate only a few spoonfuls of porridge, and doctors said he was losing strength because the intravenous feedings cannot supply enough nutrition.

Imperial officials have declined to confirm or deny news reports that Hirohito has cancer in the area of his upper intestine.

pen," she emphasized.

The two women speakers, Jackie and Shauna, who asked to have their last names withheld, spoke about their experiences. Both women met Freeman at the University of Southern California Alcohol and Drug Prevention Center during their years as students there. They eventually became involved as peer counselors.

They have been part of a program organized by Freeman that has brought them to other UCLA sorority houses and even a national Alpha Chi Omega conference this past summer. They focused on the aspects of denial, low self-esteem and the emotional swings associated with being an addict or living in a family with an addict.

"I'm telling you what my life was like so that you can see a picture of someone who was in college and had a problem," said Jackie while explaining that she came from a "perfect" home.

Jackie had her first alcoholic drink at the age of 11 and began smoking marijuana in junior high school. "Suddenly the picture was lifted, that hole in my gut was filled," she said.

Although she feels that marijuana made her anti-social, Jackie was actively involved in her high school. She played sports and graduated with a 4.0 grade point average. "I could hang out with anybody," she said, "but I never felt like I truly belonged."

"Alcohol is a downer, but when I tried coke, which was an upper, to me it was a balance," she said. Jackie was in the 10th grade when she tried cocaine for the first time.

Jackie attended USC on almost a full scholarship, but continued her drug addiction while at school. During her second year, however, a few incidents changed her attitude. Jackie was in a car accident due to driving while under the influence of alcohol and drugs, and she was arrested for the possession of cocaine. Both events led her to the substance abuse center at USC.

Jackie said that she has not used alcohol or drugs for two and a half years. She is currently attending junior college, after losing her scholarship at USC, and has an internship in the entertainment industry.

"I'm a walking miracle, that's all I'm telling you," she said. "I have self-esteem, I love my parents, we have a wonderful relationship. I have friends today who love me for who I am. Even if I don't help one single person in this room, I help myself because I have everything I want in my life right now."

Shauna, in her first year of a doctoral program, spoke about her "very disfunctional family," which she said included an alcoholic mother and a father and sister who denied, and still continue to deny her mother's alcohol addiction.

"Nobody would have ever known," she said about her years in high school. "People would look at me and say, 'she has everything.' I would have a big smile on my face all day and then go home and cry."

Shauna explained how she was treated as a scapegoat for her family's problems and anxieties throughout her years as a child. Once at USC, she felt that the problems would decrease, but her family would call her and continue the emotional abuse.

During her first year at USC, Shauna met Freedman in a health class. "I sat in a room full of strangers and said my mother was an alcoholic," she recalled.

Surpassing her parents' negativism and realizing that she was not "crazy," as she said her parents had told her, were two hurdles that Shauna had to overcome. "The reason I needed to find help and solace is because the whole family system was crazy, not me," she said.

When Shauna refused to participate in the family conflicts, she said, her family withdrew their financial support of her education. Through scholarships and loans, though, Shauna finished her undergraduate studies at USC.

"No matter how hard I work on this stuff, it still affects me," Shauna admitted. "If it weren't for all this help I've received, I don't know where I'd be today. I know talking like this will help people; that's why I'm here. I've learned to trust people, to love myself."

see people discussing politics openly."

Another indication of the changes the Soviet society has undergone is a proliferation of black marketeers.

"It seems that the authorities let the black markets go on," he remarked. "They're pretty small-scale, but it's so blatant. They hang out in front of major tourist attractions."

Sudol said that the black marketeers trade mainly in American and European clothing and goods and that there seems to be an extensive communication network between the black marketeers.

"I traded one of my tie-dyed T-shirts for a black market Lenigrad Hard Rock shirt and the next day I saw a black marketeer in a totally different place wearing it," Sudol recalled.

Despite the availability of black market goods, the standard of living for the average Soviet citizen is much lower than for the average American, Sudol remarked. He added that his stay in the Lenigrad State University residence halls was a particularly vivid illustration of this difference.

"The dorms were built three years ago and they didn't seem completed," he recounted. "There were no laundry services. The rooms were roach-infested. The dorms are a 20-minute bus ride away from the university. The . . . students got food we wouldn't want to eat, like milk soup."

Sudol added that the American students were given preferential treatment and ate in the staff cafeteria, where they were given caviar and other delicacies. "Still, the food was very fatty," he said. "Especially to someone who was raised on a California diet of alfafa sprouts.

"It's not a place you go to to go shopping or to restaurants. You go to museums, parks — the architecture is beautiful, pastel-colored buildings and palaces," Sudol continued.

"Eastern Europe reminds me of how dependent on material things we are here, especially in Southern California," he said.

Sudol explained that things like transportation and basic food which are used by the general public are extremely cheap, while luxury items such as stereos and color televisions are expensive.

Despite all the differences, the Soviet Union is gradually becoming Americanized, Sudol said. The students saw a hamburger stand in Finland, a Baskin-Robbins in the lobby of Moscow's Hotel Rossiya and an Astro-Pizza stand on a Moscow street.

"It was really weird watching Russians eat pizza for the first time," Sudol remarked. "Some of them ate just the cheese and some rolled it up."

Sudol added that Russians also drank great quantities of Pepsi. The bottles were labeled with the traditional logo, but the letters were in the Cyrillic script of the Russian alphabet, he said.

It may be a small world after all.

"If he didn't agree with (the agenda), he should have voted against it. I just really question his ethics. He said he abstained for personal reasons . . . I'm concerned he may be taking stands without contacting enough students or council members," Aranovich said.

USA President Mike Meehan said, "I know the council and myself are not against affirmative action. (Cowan) felt there were a lot of things on the agenda that didn't relate to UCLA undergraduates, which is who he represents."

At the meeting, Aranovich told Cowan, "If you make a decision, I would hope that the decision would be coming from every single member of this entire council."

General Representative Mike Spence reminded the council that Cowan invited all members to attend the UCSA meeting. "To ask someone to vote against their conscience is morally wrong." He said it was "courageous" to be the only person to abstain.

Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss said, "I don't think anybody here has the right to tell someone to vote against their conscience . . . I think Bruce has done a fine job."

At press time, Cowan could not be reached for additional comment.

After discussion over details, a Student Representation Resolution proposed by Aranovich was accepted by council.

Last week the approval of the proposed resolution was postponed until discrepancies between council members over wording could be cleared up.

Aranovich presented a revised resolution that was accepted unanimously by USAC at the meeting.

"I feel I had to make a lot of compromises," Aranovich said. "People misunderstood . . . what diversity means and what it is.

"I'm glad council made a statement to the campus. I hope in the future we can make a sincere effort . . . to find people from different backgrounds," she added.

Lost city

The artifacts fix the date of the city at 1500 B.C., which coincides with historical dates referring to the city of Dwarka, in the "Mahabbarata."

The epic was composed around 500 B.C. and describes events which occurred 500 years before then. It has greatly influenced all aspects of Indian and Southeast Asian culture, said UCLA Professor Damodar Sar Desai.

According to Hartmut Scharfe, professor of Indian studies, "Up to now, Krishna has been a mythical hero. But now, the discovery of Dwarka authenticates at least parts of the 'Mahabbarata' and indicates that Krishna actually lived."

It is important that a city was found where the 'Mahabbarata' says there should have been one," he continued. "Now we can believe that the stories that were passed down from generation to generation were not figments of the imagination. They are based upon reality, upon historical events."

Allocations

. We're trying to provide more for students.

Both Ambrose and Wada explained that overnight accomodations will be needed to coordinate "block booking" with other schools. "Block booking" allows the two commissions to save money by plan activities in conjunction with other schools.

General Representative Mike Spence opposed the decision. "It is wrong and irresponsible. Some groups receive zero funding and then some live in comfort (near) LAX, (where the conference hotel is located)."

Ambrose disagreed, saying, "Describing six people in one hotel room for three nights as comfort is bordering on absurd. Driving back and forth is an absurdity."

Later, Spence said, "I never questioned the program. I just don't think it's fair to use student money to let them stay in a hotel room. There are better ways to allocate that money. To let people sleep in a hotel down the road I don't think is fair."

Ambrose noted the $7000 that USAC budgeted to send council members to two USAC retreats this year, calling it "interesting."

"This convention is to teach us to do our jobs," he said. "We're going to be saving thousands of dollars and staying in cramped conditions.

Another finance committee decision to allott no funds to the Jewish Students Union (JSU) led to discussion among USAC members and postponement of the decision.

JSU requested $300 from USAC for a retreat at the University of Judaism that already occurred, and Arvizu recommended that no money be allocated.

Student Welfare Commissioner Mark Rodriguez motioned that USAC allott $258.20 for costs including fliers, advertising and scholarship for some who attended.

Spence ammended that $250 be allocated for 18 people's registration costs and transportation.

"I think we're doing Fi-Comm's job," Meehan said, requesting that the report be tabled. "If (groups) get no money (from the finance committee), they only have to find one council member to bring it up."

Executive Vice President Mark Harrington agreed. "I don't like the fact of a council member bring up a financial matter at the table," he said.

Academic Affairs Commissioner Florie Aranovich said that allocating the funds without a recommendation from the Finance Committee would be a "bad precedent for us to set."

But Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss wanted to vote on the allocation at the Tuesday meeting. "It's not fair to ask the group to wait . . . we have a commitment to let them know if we are going to fund JSU's retreat or not. I think tabling it would be a mistake."

However, the decision was tabled.

Administrative Representative Lyle Timmerman said, "I do think we're doing Fi-Comm's job here. If you don't back the Fi-Comm chair . . . folks get the sense that there's a way around it."

grounds, building, and finance committee on Thursday will discuss the seismic renovations, according to Young.

When General Representative Mike Spence asked Young about his feelings on the Oct. 4 hearing on racism, headed by Sen. Art Torres, the chancellor replied, "I think they were," he paused, "there."

Young then joked, "I've already said things that have gotten me into trouble."

He continued, "I don't know if there's anything new we learned as a result of that or anything we should be working on that we haven't been working on," emphasizing that the university "would have to wait and see if anything comes out of it."

Although they were given the opportunity to do so, no audience members chose to ask Young a question.

The chancellor was at the meeting for approximately 40 minutes until no there were no further questions from council.

Shooting

Details of the biopsy a well as reasons it was per formed at UCLA were no available at press time.

Fully-loaded revolver

Police claim that Sawick entered the lab at 10:40 a.m with a fully-loaded, five- round .38 revolver. When she saw the lab pathologist she shot at him, according to police reports.

Cueba said the pathologist was not involved in Sawicki's biopsy. "It was a lab employee who just happened to be there when the suspect walked in with a gun."

Five officers responded about two minutes after the shot was fired and found Sawicki standing in the lab with the revolver fully cocked, Cueba said.

After officers repeatedly ordered her to lay down the revolver, Sawicki complied and surrendered.

Pellet ammunition

Police said that when Sawicki walked into the lab, the revolver was loaded with two normal rounds and three other rounds filled with shot pellets.

Cueba said the three pellet rounds, one of which was fired, are encased in a plastic shell and are designed to fragment on impact.

However, at press time police did not determine whether the fragmenting rounds are more lethal than normal ammunition.

Side-stepping the issues is an American political tradition

By Steven Sherwood

Seemingly the only thing more common in this Presidential year than so-called "spin doctors" are constant complaints that the campaign is "issueless," "vague," and "superficial." If I had a dollar for every time a political pundit bemoaned the lack of "issues," why I could probably afford to move in next to Ron and Nancy Reagan's retirement palace in Bel Air.

Is this neglect of issues really news? Have I been living in a different country than these political observers or what? To hear most commentators tell it, the current election is the greatest hoax since Pia Zadora. But, in fact, this Presidential contest is no different than its predecessors. Of course Presidential elections are "issueless," "vague," and "superficial." How did we get Reagan as President for eight years? Through Divine Intervention?

The corollary of this "lack of issues" argument is that the American public is somehow being cheated of "substance." Robbed of a fair opportunity to weigh where the candidates stand on the good ol' issues. As far as I can tell, this is the same American public that idolizes Sylvester Stallone as "Rambo," whose bestselling magazine is TV Guide, and most of whom wouldn't recognize the Bill of Rights unless it were on the back of a cereal box. Does that sound like a public thirsty for substance?

The reason that "issues" are not predominant in this, or any other election, is that we cannot separate our politics from the rest of society. In other words: in a "consumer society," you get "consumer politics." American society is characterized by a reverence for Success in Business. Such success involves Slick Packaging, Slick Marketing and Slick Labels. This adds up to Slick Politics and an electorate less interested in substance than image.

The notion that "issues" matter implies that Americans value high intelligence in their Presidents. But the history of American politics is littered with the corpses of candidates who had a firm grasp of the issues. No Presidential candidate was perhaps more intellectually astute than Adlai Stevenson: he went down to defeat twice to Dwight Eisenhower, no intellectual Goliath. Would anyone dispute the superior grasp of the issues by Jimmy Carter, nuclear engineer, as opposed to Ronald Reagan, "Bonzo's" co-star?

Recently the critics of this year's campaign were joined by two former Presidents in questioning the tenor of the campaign, Richard Nixon and Carter. But for these two politicians to imply that their respective campaigns were somehow more "issue-oriented" than the current one is scaling new heights in hypocrisy.

In fact, intellectual competence is generally a handicap for Presidential candidates. Political historian Richard Hofstadter pointed out long ago that American society is marked by a severe "anti-intellectualism." Americans in general have a traditional dislike for "eggheads." Hence, in this year's campaign Bush has tried to tar Dukakis by associating him with a "Harvard mafia."

Recently the critics of this year's campaign were joined by two former Presidents in questioning the tenor of the campaign, Richard Nixon and Carter. But for these two politicians to imply that their respective campaigns were somehow more "issue-oriented" than the current one is scaling new heights in hypocrisy. Richard Nixon refused to even discuss the issues; he declined to debate his opponents in the 1968 and 1972. Carter, meanwhile, had the advantage of running against the only person in the world who thought Poland wasn't dominated by the Soviet Union, Gerald Ford. Even then, Carter won only by the barest of margins

Political commentators, then, should stop working the tired cliches of how "superficial" and "vague" Campaign '88 is. Campaign '88 is just like every other American political campaign: slick. And it's slick because that's what the American people respond to. Bush and Dukakis are just the reflections of the society they want to lead. They're trying their damnedest to give America exactly what it wants: High Gloss, No Issues.

If the experts want a different kind of American politics, they're going to have to start by getting a different kind of American society. Maybe they should start talking about that.

Now that's a real Issue . . .

Sherwood is a graduate student of sociology.

The 'Quayle factor' is a Democratic smokescreen

By Michael Buchta

It must be difficult for supporters of Michael Dukakis to accept that their candidate is out of touch with mainstream America and quite probably will lose the election to George Bush come Nov. 8. I refer to Jonathan Congdon's viewpoint article (Bruin, Oct. 17), which consists of at least one outright lie and many misrepresentations of the facts.

Congdon states "Dan Quayle has a 50 percent chance of becoming president," if George Bush is elected. I don't know whose history and statistics Congdon is quoting, but it doesn't even remotely resemble that of America. To date, only eight administrations of forty have been cut short because of illness, death, assassination or resignation. That means that, of 199 years of administrations, less than 32 years have been interrupted by unexpected change. The odds are overwhelmingly in Bush's favor that he will serve the full four years, if elected, and even the full eight years, if re-elected. Unless, of course, Congdon is privy to some information on Bush's health that the entire world has been left out on.

This false argument points to the painful impotence that the Democrats are experiencing. They feel the need to frighten people about the so-called "Quayle factor" because Dukakis simply can't measure up to Bush.

Congdon seems comfortable suggesting that Quayle purchased his Senate seat and yet fails to note Bentsen's vast wealth. It also seems to elude Congdon that Bentsen has received more PAC money than any other member of Congress, and that Republicans want to eliminate such contributions to both parties. Further, while Bentsen was serving $10,000 ham and eggs to lobbyists, many Texans were going hungry, jobless and homeless. Maybe that's why Bush-Quayle are 10-15 points ahead in Texas.

It is also evident that Congdon's definition of "average" is self-serving. If grades were truly important, then Van Gogh wouldn't be considered an artist nor Einstein a genius, for both did poorly in school.

I also fail to make a connection between leadership and student performance. You can be a good leader and a good student. You can be a good leader and a poor student. You could be a good leader and never be a student at all. And, to be fair, why wasn't Bentsen asked for his report card? Isn't that age discrimination? Dukakis supporters would probably want to know how many times Dan Quayle was sent to the principal's office in grade school.

Congdon's article shows great disdain for Quayle's answer to what he would do if he had to assume the presidency. Three times, Quayle answered the question by more or less saying he would first speak with God (pray); second, consult with the cabinet (gather input from experts); and, finally, handle the situation as necessary (act).

Three times, Quayle answered the question in the above way, and three times in his rebuttal Bentsen failed to give any inkling of what he would do in similar circumstances. It's Bentsen who failed to make the grade on that question, not Quayle. Bentsen had a great opportunity to show what he would do but instead fell into pre-programmed rhetoric and ridicule.

Finally, something should be said about the infamous "You're no Jack Kennedy" line. I am glad Dan Quayle is no Jack Kennedy, but that's not the point. Something has been missed in this "sound bite" age. Before the line, Bentsen said that JFK was "a friend of mine." Yet no correspondence between the two can bear that out. And the JFK society never consulted Bentsen on his "recollections" (unlike they normally would for friends). What do you think of a nominee who would use the memory of an honored colleague for purely political gain?

Nov. 8 will surely be a good day.

Buchta is a senior majoring in political science.

Some disabilities are not apparent

Editor:

This morning as I parked in a disabled spot in Dixon Court, a man called out to a woman as she got in her car, "Hey, are you disabled?" She replied, "I wouldn't have a disabled placard if I wasn't." He persisted, "You don't look disabled."

Many of us don't look disabled, but we have a wide range of invisible disabilities — arthritis, heart conditions, etc. Frequently, we are harassed by people who disregard the fact that we do have disabled placards on our cars.

Our message to those is: don't harass someone with a placard. The UCLA Office of Disabilities requires verification for a disabled parking permit. The disability is enough to deal with without dealing with harassment as well.

The winnebago slogans were sexist and immature

By Laura McLeod

A huge banner hanging from the Beta house caught my eye as I walked home Friday afternoon. I decided to give the Betas the benefit of the doubt and take its message "Betas like Bush" simply as a general political statement instead of the sexist pun that was no doubt intended.

I found it difficult, however, to ignore the winnebagos covered with lewd, derogatory slogans that lined Gayley and Strathmore. By far the most offensive and shocking were the two foot letters on one that spelled out "Rape and Pillage." Certainly it can't be too hard for college-educated students to realize that rape is something to be reviled, not glorified. I find it inconceivable that any civilized member of this community would condone or, worse yet, wish that horror upon another. But it would be pointless to single out each fraternity that had these 'bagos because, as far as I could see, practically every fraternity on the row had them.

Perhaps I am being too critical. Perhaps, as has been said innumerable times before, the brothers really didn't realize they were offending anyone. After all, the 'bagos were crammed full of females who didn't seem bothered in the least.

I continued up Strathmore, reminding myself that not all the fraternities were so unaware. I took encouragement in the sensitive apology from ZBT's president (Bruin, Oct. 14).

This optimism quickly faded as I approached the ZBT 'bagos. To my dismay, the paintbrushes were working in full force. A large drawing of a certain part of the male anatomy was accompanied by the phrase "lick my dick."

Are we still to be so naive as to believe that ZBT and the rest of the Greek community wishes to "fortify rather than enfeeble . . . the already tenuous bonds" of their relationship with the UCLA community? Are we still to believe that the design of the Greek system doesn't suppress individuality by compelling its members to act so immaturely or at least to look the other way while others do?

Of course, the blame should not rest entirely on the Greeks. The university does not seem to realize that the fraternities and their 'bagos are not only poorly representing themselves, but also UCLA in general. The university has had ample opportunity to take action on problems within the system such as these. But until it does we can only hope that these boys come to some kind of self-revelation and grow up.

The interests of bi-quarterly publications must be served

By Lionel Mandy

As a former member of the ASUCLA Communications Board, I am disturbed by the attitude taken by Robert O'Connor in his counterpoint article (Bruin, Oct. 4). The situation to which he refers concerning the Communications Board proposals to aid the bi-quarterly publications (so named because the staffs of those publications — NOMMO, La Gente de Aztlan, Pacific Ties, Together, TenPercent and Ha'am — found the designation "special interest newspapers" to be an unfair representation of their status and their focus) is a difficult one. The focus on economic viability of those papers has done much to take away from their editorial content, since the size and publication date of each paper is determined by their ability to reach advertising dollar amounts designated by the Communications Board. However, many of us in the African, Latino and Asian/Pacific Island communities have wondered where the university, the Communications Board and ASUCLA stand, given their verbal commitment to diversity that lacks sufficient funding to make real that commitment in the cases of the newspapers listed above. It is that historic and ongoing disappointment that provoked the statement attributed to La Gente's editor Adriana Manjarrez by Mr. O'Connor: "If you're not with us, then you must be against us."

Mr. O'Connor goes on to prove Ms. Manjarrez correct. He explains his commitment to the six above-named publications this way in his counterpoint article: "But the truth of the matter is that I couldn't care less whether these publications come out on time (or not), or whether they exist (or not); it makes no difference to me one way or the other." He then says he will still vote in a way that best represents their interests.

First, I wish to thank Mr. O'Connor for so clearly stating what many of us in the communities of color have long known — that, at best, he, like those in power in the white community, is indifferent about our survival and progress — but in spite of that they/he will do what is deemed in our best interest for us. Paternalism of that type serves us well in that it clarifies for us the need to move toward self-determination, since those in positions of influence have no real concern about us.

Secondly, I point Mr. O'Connor to Article II, Section C of the ASUCLA Communications Board Constitution, which states: "The first and foremost responsibility of the Board is to promote and advance its student communication media." In that regard, his counterpoint article represents a lack of commitment to his office — he is only committed to promoting the best interests of the Daily Bruin.

Thirdly, the monetary crisis that is of so much concern here has long been mislabelled and demands clarification. The Communications Board has a pot of money from which to operate each year. That money is not designated for the Bruin or any other medium in particular when the Communications Board begins to allocate it. It is the Board that allocates its uses. The Board has the power to decide, for instance, that since it has a strong commitment to its diverse student media, it will reallocate its costs such that the expenses created by all the media should be borne by the profits made by the Daily Bruin. The constant commitment to making the bi-quarterly publications pay their share is a Communications Board decision. The bi-quarterly publications were never intended to be profit makers (but were intended to serve their respective communities). The Communications Board has one overall pot of money on which to operate, not ten little pots that are each directed toward one of the media. So while the Communications Board seeks to gain more funding from its operations (we people of color are watching for the commitment of the chancellor and the university on this issue, since it too says it is committed to promoting our existence and well-being on campus), I would like the Board to take the economic pressure off the bi-quarterly publications and find ways to spread the projected deficits around.

MEDIA: Communications Board must serve all of its student publications

Finally, I challenge the Communications Board to move beyond the bland response made by Chairperson George Ruiz to sanction Mr. O'Connor for his public disregard for these media. Given O'Connor's "commitment," no apology he would make could convince me that the interests of the bi-quarterly publications will be served. Lest I be read as being too vague, I suggest that Mr. O'Connor be removed from his position in favor of someone who more fairly represents the interests of the bi-quarterly publications, as well as those of the Communications Board.

The media's lack of fair election coverage brings us closer to 1984

By Lorie Thomas

There has been much talk — increasingly more frequent and serious — buzzing among my friends and acquaintances, of moving out of the country if George Bush, God forbid, is elected president.

Why such drastic measures? The average, white-washed, brainwashed, dollar-sign-eyeballed, ethics-free-zone Bush supporter might scoff. Open the eyes God gave you, we say. Sure we're all progressive liberals, vehemently and proudly so, unlike some people, unfortunately. But you don't have to be one to see the signs of fascism becoming more and more evident every day in this country. We ask the right: Haven't any of you ever read George Orwell's 1984, or seen Terry Gilliam's Brazil?

The media are controlling this election, and creating what "happens" by covering some events and ignoring others. Already they have confirmed the election of Bush — for which apparent reason the demonstration of a coalition of progressive campus organizations protesting Bush's candidacy outside the debate Thursday afternoon, on the grounds of his countless criminal activities, went completely ignored by not only the Bruin, but by the Los Angeles Times, and was covered only passingly, if that, by all local television stations — despite the fact that we even handed out press releases. On the other hand, and apparently for the same reason, a whole Bruin column's worth of attention was devoted to the foul mouth of Thelonius Monster's lead singer.

Another example of the media's lack of responsibility and commitment to honest and fair coverage has been the near complete absence of coverage of the independents' campaigns. Thursday at the student demonstration, when a recent graduate told a reporter that there are other candidates on the ballot besides Bush and Dukakis, he responded, "Really? Who?" And when she replied, "Fulani, for instance," he asked her how to spell it!

We are angry and appalled, but mostly frightened by these blatant proofs of the media's irresponsibility and apparent willfulness in ignoring reality and continuing to create and report on their own "events" and "news," turning coverage into a series of empty, meaningless photo-opportunities, and bringing Orwell's predictions nearer and nearer reality every day.

Are the media our voice or our dictator? Are they for or against democracy and a fair election? Is this the United States or a South American U.S.-supported dictatorship?

We only ask for fair coverage so that the voices of this country can be fairly heard on Nov. 8 and beyond. If there is a poor turnout at the polls and an overwhelming wave of apathy, it is largely the media's fault for not presenting the public with a real choice.

Why isn't there any handsoap in the restrooms?

Editor:

How often and in what manner do you suppose that one would need to complain in order to keep the LuValle Commons restrooms supplied with hand soap? Perhaps the Department of Public Health would wonder the same? It's not a small matter when one considers that the same employees who use the restrooms also handle our morning croissants. Frightening.

Rising actor Pickett 'grateful' for UCLA training

By William Quinn, Senior Staff Writer

Two years ago actor Jay Pickett, currently to be seen in the little theater success G. R. Point, walked away with high acting honors at UCLA.

He dominated the annual Hugh O'Brian acting awards, a prestigious springboard into the industry for UCLA actors and actresses, performing in a scene from John Patrick Shanley's Danny and The Deep Blue Sea. The excerpt won Best Scene, and Pickett was voted First Runner-Up as best performer. He graduated from UCLA that year with an M.F.A. in Theater Arts.

Since then, Pickett found a high-powered manager and a berth with one of the more prestigious talent conglomerates, Contemporary Artists. He has appeared as featured guest in two hour-long television episodes — ABC's China Beach and NBC's Rags to Riches — and recently completed a soon-to-be-released frat-house comedy, the feature film Rush Week.

Locally, on stage, he has appeared in Second Stage Theater's production of The Indian Wants the Bronx and G. R. Point — not yet exactly a resume to set the world on fire though undeniably a lot more than many young tyros get in their first year looking for work in Hollywood. Let's say he's paying his dues.

"Winning the Hugh O'Brian saved me two years though," says Pickett, who was on campus Monday. Originally, he had entered Boise State University on a football scholarship, although he had "had always dreamed of an acting career."

During his four years there, he increasingly found a conflict in the demands on his time between football and theater. He dropped the football and stuck with the theater.

Upon graduation, having been accepted into UCLA's master's program, he and his wife Elena (who worked to put him through) came to Los Angeles. Now that he's beginning to make a living, Elena continues to work. "She has a career, not a job," says Pickett. His wife is in fashion marketing for a local manufacturer.

Performing in G. R. Point, while gratifying after the drought of auditions during the recent Writer's strike, is a mixed blessing. Pickett plays a young officer who is a bit of an ass (although this is not the point of the script) and the role is frankly overshadowed by the leads, whom the Vietnam drama is really about. Pickett is Lt. Johnson, part of the mise-en-scene and confined to bursting into the barracks looking for recruits to join his volley ball team. (Well, Humphrey Bogart's first Broadway role actually involved Bogie bounding in through French doors inquiring, "Tennis, anyone?" For real.)

"The director told me this would be the hardest role to play in the show, and we really worked to get some layers into the character so he just wouldn't be a cipher," says Pickett. He has succeeded to a remarkable degree. The character could be hateful in lesser hands, but at least the audience likes him. Also, when called into combat, Lt. Johnson scores with an about-face as the character is believably combat-ready as he bursts into action.

For Pickett, UCLA was not just a crack at the Hugh O'Brian's, as the young actor gives his training here a great deal of the credit for his preparedness. "I see other guys at auditions — talented, good-looking, pleasant — and I feel sorry for them because they just don't have the training."

Pickett brims with particular gratitude for the tutelage of UCLA acting teacher Tom Orth in his training which included voice (both diction and production), movement (dance, combat and stress control), as well as artistic interpretation (meaning acting classes).

Pickett admits his biggest challenge was losing his Idaho regionalism in speech. "It was basically flat vowels, besides just poor grammar," he said. At Boise State, Pickett's favorite production in which he was involved was She Stoops to Conquer in which he played Marlowe — British-accent-and-all layered over the Idahoan, he cheerfully added.

Though affable and open, it is difficult to assess Pickett's chances in the most difficult profession of all. Though we'll agree while awaiting stardom that it is required to practice a little humility, instincts here are that the nice guy we met is probably the real Jay Pickett.

'Clue': Sherlock Holmes meets Inspector Clouseau

By Gregory Keer, Contributor

■ FILM : *Without a Clue. Director Thom Eberhardt. Written by Gary Murphy and Larry Strawther. Producer Marc Stirdivant. With Michael Caine and Ben Kingsley. An Orion Pictures release.

The idea of pairing Michael Caine and Ben Kingsley in a comedic send-up of the Sherlock Holmes literary legend has all the earmarks of a crowd-pleasing film — a potential classic. While the appeal of director Thom Erberhardt's light-hearted perversion of the timeless characters of Holmes and Watson is an open and shut case, its possibilities for film immortality are more than suspect.

Without A Clue, which opens nation-wide this Friday, turns Arthur Conan Doyle's detecting protagonists inside out. In the Doyle stories, Dr. John Watson was the doddling foil to Holmes' deductive intellect. According to the script written by Gary Murphy and Larry Strawther (two former T.V. story editors who met on the set of My Sister Sam), the real crime-solving genius is Dr. Watson (Kingsley) who, in an effort to disguise his unorthodox sleuthing hobby from the conservative medical community, creates a fictional character named Sherlock Holmes (Caine) as his front.

To play the part of Holmes, Watson chooses Reginald Kincaid — a third-rate actor who is is thrown out of employment when his play, The Shadow Of Death, ends in the middle of the second act of the opening performance. Cosmetically, Kincaid fills the Holmes role as snugly as he fits into his deerstalker cap and Inverness cap. Behaviorally, he is a flop. "Sherlock" drinks, philanders, and forgets his lines (quite often he has Watson finish his sentences for him: "Watson, you fill in the details").

Watson has been fairly forgiving of Holmes' lack of discipline and manages to play a Hollywood-type public-relations man in the interest of keeping the credit firmly placed on Holmes. But when the actor makes the serious blunder of calling an art theft case (the film begins with this crime in progress) closed without Watson giving the say-so, the good doctor's integrity gets in the way and he promptly fires him.

Unfortunately for Watson, no one believes him when he tells them that he is the real crime-solver. Even Greenhough (Peter Cook), the publisher of The Strand (the magazine which prints Watson's accounts of Holmes' capers), claims the public will never buy any

Rocker Kilzer mixes academics, athletics, arts

By Eric Gorfain
Contributor

JOHN KILZER is a nice guy. It's almost surprising to find such a nice guy in the music business. John Kilzer is a smart guy. It's more surprising to find such a smart guy in the music business. John Kilzer is a big guy. It's shocking to see such a big guy holding a guitar on stage. In fact, Kilzer must become more popular just so he can have bigger stages on which to play.

Because John Kilzer is so new on the scene, let me back up and give the uninitiated some background. Kilzer plays hot rock 'n' roll that's Southern-smooth but raunchy enough to tear down the house out here in sunny SoCal. Once an All-American high school basketball player, he chose local Memphis State University over UCLA because "It was important to me that parents could watch me play on TV."

But his basketball coach didn't think it was important. "I was never your "rah-rah" kinda guy. It was more of an inward intensity than one that I showed ostentatiously. It was one of those things where we didn't click." So John turned to music to vent his frustrations. "I bought a Bob Dylan songbook and an old acoustic guitar and started bangin' away. It was more self-therapy than anything."

But he showed some talent for his new hobby and was encouraged by local sports fans in the music business. As he practiced his craft, he figured he had to do something with his Bachelor's degree in English Literature. "I moved furniture for a while and that was really, really rough. So I said, 'what in hell can I do?' So I went back and started on my Masters and lucky enough, when I got that, they offered me a teaching position at the University."

John Kilzer

Soon, teaching by day and performing at night began to take its toll. "I wasn't able to give (teaching) as much energy as I would have liked. However, I would go back to teaching (if the music doesn't work out), but I'd have to go somewhere to get my Ph.D."

Kilzer uses his knowledge of literature in his music. It's safe to say that he worries about the lyrics he sings much more than the notes he plays. "I draw a whole lot (from literature), especially a lot of the metaphors and similes. I try not to be real blatant with it, but there are some universal images that throughout mankind have sprung up, and if you use those tastefully, I think it works.

"You just have to be real careful with some of those images and symbols or else you'll seem like you're being real lackadaisical with some of the powerful things." There is a certain reverence in Kilzer's words that shows his total respect for the language and its uses. He speaks as if he is a chemist of words.

What about his music, you say? I thought you'd never ask. His debut album, Memory in

The cast of the film 'Running on Empty.'

FILM COMMENTARY: 'Running' is empty

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

Sidney Lumet's latest, Running On Empty, is the tear-jerker of the season. Its story of family breakup, noble idealists in an unjust world, and growing pains hits a lot of emotional chords, just not any of mine.

Despite all the brouhaha over the film, saying it is moving and involving, Running On Empty left me cold.

Certainly, a film does not have to make you cry to be a good film. Running On Empty simply does not add up to an emotional force, and that's what makes me wonder why so many critics have been touting it as such a moving experience.

In Gunter Grass' The Tin Drum, (admittedly, a book that does not lend itself to comparison), there is a nightclub called the Onion Cellar. Patrons of the Onion Cellar, upon entering, ceremoniously receive a paring knife and an onion, and commence communal onion peeling. "What did the onion juice do?" Grass writes, "It did what the world and the sorrows of the world could not do: it brought forth a round, human tear. It made them cry. At last they were able to cry again. To cry properly, without restraint, to cry like mad."

Running On Empty reminds me a hell of a lot of that onion.

The film follows Arthur and Annie Pope (Judd Hirsch and Christine Lahti), and their young sons, 17 year-old Danny (River Phoenix) and 10 year-old Harry (Jonas Abry) through a

Alberto Isaac, Sala Iwamatsu, Jason Ma and Benjamin Lum in 'The Fantasticks.'

Delightful 'Fantasticks' at East-West

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ THEATER: The Fantasticks. Book and lyrics by Tom Jones. Music by Harvey Schmidt. Directed by Mako and G.L. Chin. With Francois Chau, Sala Iwamatsu, Jason Ma, Alberto Isaac, Benjamin Lum. At East West Players theater, 4424 Santa Monica Blvd., Los Angeles. $2.00 student discount (with ID) off all seats except Saturday. For more information call (213) 660-0366). Runs until Nov. 13, 1988.

Once again, East-West Players, the pioneering local Asian-American theater, is offering an excellent production marked with economy, wit and verve. Their latest project is a revival of the romantic musical hit The Fantasticks, which is still running off-Broadway after 28 years. The show's magic and humor registered full impact in the small, intimate theater that has been home to East-West Players for about two decades (they are about to move to a new location in Little Tokyo).

Combining reality with enchanting surrealism, the simple yet engaging story is essentially a lesson in the difficult yet worthwhile ways of love. Scheming to have their children fall in love, two neighboring fathers (Alberto Isaac and Benjamin Lum) go through drastic lengths — including pretending a feud between the two families, and hiring the flamboyant conjurer El Gallo to stage an elaborate rape scene.

The cast is outstanding, featuring two remarkable performances in the roles of the young lovers by UCLA students, past and present. As Luisa, undergraduate Theater Arts major Sala Iwamatsu evoked each emotional nuance and adolescent whim with charming results; her vivacious portrayal provides the glowing heart for The Fantasticks. Iwamatsu conveyed much with her mercurial facial expressions alone, alternating between utter joy and anger, resentment. UCLA Theater Arts alumnus Jason Ma is likewise impressive as Matt. Ma also does a wonderful job choreographing the dance sequences. As the plotting fathers, Isaac and Lum shone with their humorous banter.

Scott Nagatani on piano provided felicitous musical accompaniment, holding the show together with his instrumental backdrop. The sparse set was quite efficient, reflecting the simple, carefree mood of the musical.

The score is a big reason behind the The Fantasticks's popularity. The show's top-notch songs included the breathtaking "You are Love" and the enlightening "Try to Remember" (with its wise words "Without a hurt, the heart is hollow"). And although it could be considered light-hearted, the stories solved by the self-proclaimed "Crime Doctor."

The end to Watson's short-lived public detective career arrives when the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Nigel Davenport) comes calling on 221-B Baker St. with a mystery of dire emergency for the British empire. It seems someone has stolen the minting plates for five-pound notes and replaced them with forgeries. Despite Watson's promise to crack the crime himself, the treasurer refuses to give the case to anyone except Sherlock. Thus, Watson must swallow his pride and re-hire Kincaid if he is to get his chance at unraveling this major mystery or else the case will be handed over to Scotland Yard's bungling Inspector Lestrade (played with covert humor by Jeffrey Jones).

Life returns to abnormal for Watson and Holmes as they set upon their search for clues for the mint thief, whose trail smells faintly of Professor Moriarty. Fans of the Conan Doyle stories will remember Moriarty as the criminal mastermind who was Holmes' intellectual equal. In this case, Paul Freeman (most noted for his portrayal of the evil archaeologist in Raiders Of The Lost Ark) brings an icy

HUMAN RIGHTS NOW! TOUR ENDS

Last Saturday, 20 cities in 15 countries later, Amnesty International's Human Rights Now! Tour wound up its six-week stint of concerts in Argentina. The concert which combined the talents of Sting, Bruce Springsteen, Peter Gabriel, Tracy Chapman, and Youssou N' Dour of Senegal traveled 35,00 miles with a total audience of 1 million, The Los Angeles Times reports.

SHE BORROWED BLUE VELVET

Nancy's at it again. In 1982, our First Lady vowed to stop borrowing designer clothing and jewelry without reporting it on her income taxes, but designer David Hayes told Time Magazine that Nance has borrowed 60 to 80 outfits from him in the last eight years. She has also been reported to have borrowed jewelry (par example a $800,000 pair of earrings) from jewelry monger Harry Winston. Have these loaners made it on to the Reagans' tax returns in the past eight years? No, but doesn't she look better than Raisa and isn't that what counts, after all?

HOLLYWOOD BALLOT BOX

In a dilemma about whom to vote for in our upcoming presidential election? Why not cast your ballot along with your favorite celeb? US Magazine lists the celebrated folk in both parties. Among those for Bush — Action actors Arnold Schwarzenegger and Chuck Norris, Tony Danza, star of Who's The Boss, and actress Cheryl Ladd (Wait, are Charlie's Angels cast members allowed to vote?). On the side of the Demos — Leonard In Search Of/ Mr. Spock Nimoy, Don Johnson and Barbra Streisand (ain't love grand) and Archie Bunker's alter ego Carroll O'Connor. Now you guess. Hanoi Jane Fonda — liberal or conservative? Aging comedian Bob Hope — elephant or donkey?

DICK'S DIARY

" . . . she is beautiful beyond the dreams of pornography . . . " said the late Richard Burton of his twice-wife Elizabeth Taylor. These and more tidbits come straight from Burton's diary (excerpted in this month's Life). Soon to also be brought out in British journalist Melvyn Bragg's biography of the actor, Rich: The Life of Richard Burton, the journals also proclaim Liz as "the eternal one-night stand." Later, when Liz and Dick reunited on stage in 1983 for the production of Private Lives, Burton wasn't as complimentary, saying that she was "as exciting as a flounder" and that she "couldn't even read the lines properly."

HERE AND THERE

Fine literature bulletin — Irangate secretary Fawn Hall is penning her autobiography in 1989 . . . Elvis a grandfather? 'Tis true. Appears that his daughter Lisa Marie is with child after being married for a little over a week. Wouldn't it be nice if he would come out of hiding when the little Presley is born . . . James Brown can't be feelin' too good about his estranged wife Adrienne's recent conviction on PCP possession charges.

NO FATHER FIGURE TO HIM

Rolling Stone Keith Richards isn't too keen on the gyrations of George Michael. Richards advises the singer of I Want Your Sex to "shave and go home." He adds, "He's a wimp in disguise."

musical sneaks up on you with a strange yet delicious pull by invoking the hard lessons and verities of love.

On the down side, the costumes of some of the characters, particularly El Gallo decked out in pirate's garb, was a little bit too gimmicky, lending a hokey feel to the production.

I also found Tom Jones' 30-year old lyrics rather awkward and even offensive in a few places — especially the "Rape Song," which mentioned American Natives in no positive light, and showed rape in an illusory, condescending light. I feel that rape should never be trivialized for any reason whatsoever — and especially not for "entertainment" purposes in a musical. I simply could not dismiss this aspect of the musical, which prevented me from enjoying the show more fully.

Nevertheless, despite some of its anachronistic and perhaps even offensive lyrical content, the actors' shining performances make East West Players' The Fantasticks worth seeing. It is in general an unaffected, refreshing theatrical delight.

'Clue'

humor to the villainous character.

For their parts, Caine's and Kingsley's chemistry as the 19th-century sleuthing team likens in biting hilarity to the teamwork of Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon in The Odd Couple. However, most of the laughs result from the kind of slapstick that made Peter Seller's Inspector Clouseau roles in the Pink Panther movies so popular. Still, given the two lead actors' facility with dialogue, one has to wonder why the filmmakers didn't opt to use more witty and snappy repartee. After all, the Holmes lore is rich in exploitable conventions. Alas, what is actually exploited is the public's preference for physical rather than cognitive humor.

A lot of fun can still be had by seeing Without A Clue. Caine is a master at playing the drunken, cut-rate actor trying to pull off the part as England's most-trusted gumshoe. The costumes and setting tell half the tale with their authenticity and Eberhardt's direction (his first film was Night Of The Comet) is crisp and inventive.

Perhaps the greatest joy of the production is Kingsley's triumphant debut in a comic film role. The Oscar-winner ("Best Actor" for Gandhi) plays Watson so confidently, you almost forget what the real character was supposed to be like. Because of the lack of dialogue, Kingsley resorts to broadly funny facial expressions to draw out the most from his screen time.

Expectations at the box-office are high for Without A Clue and rightly so. Even without the lines that could have made the film worthy of the calculating wit of the Conan Doyle characters themselves, the elementary humor and flashy Hollywood production will have this movie afoot in the revenue game.

Kilzer

the Making, is a collection of quality, more-than-three-chord thought-provoking rock 'n' roll tunes.

"Pick Me Up" is one of the catchiest on the album and fun to listen to and sing with. Also included on the album is a song entitled "Dirty Dishes," a wild blues song that just "kinda rattles and rolls, doesn't it? It's a little comic relief. I don't really want to be pictured as bein' the real serious artist, you know, 'cause I'm really not."

Kilzer doesn't need spontaneity to become inspired to write, however. "I quit drinkin' about three weeks ago and it's really helped me as far as energy and inspiration. As a matter of fact, I'm here in New York for four days, and I'm lookin' right now down on Central Park. It's a little sanctuary here to write some stuff."

One of the most refreshing aspects of John Kilzer is his sincere enthusiasm about music and the business. He says, "right now, I'm like the fat girls at the prom . . . I'm just glad to be here." And even when it comes to meeting a true legend like Eric Clapton, Kilzer shows the awe of a fan rather than the coolness of a fellow performer. "It's kinda like going up and tapping God on the shoulder. I didn't work up enough nerve to go up to him."

If one were to give Kilzer some constructive criticism, however, it would regard his stage show. John is obviously still not completely comfortable onstage in big venues. He and his band don't move about the stage enough, although it's not entirely their fault. As an opening act on any tour, you are given the minimal amount of stage space, sometimes just enough in which to stand. Also, at 6'-6", Kilzer takes up a lot of that space, to say the least.

Onstage and in the studio, Kilzer is content with playing solely rhythm guitar, but his reasoning is a little unusual. "I can't play myself out of a bag (still laughing). I'm gettin' a lot better, but I'm kinda venting all my energy on the creative side of writing the melodies rather than figuring out (lead guitar parts). I'd be fifty years old before I could do that."

As for the next album and the future, Kilzer has already begun to think it through. "I want to go into new frontiers. I definitely want the next record, not to be a dramatic change, but I'd like it to show a little maturation as an artist. I want to acquire my own voice, but I also don't want to get locked into it. So I'm experimenting with different melodies and stuff. Right now it's just kind of a transitional stage."

John Kilzer has got a long way to go in the music business, but he's got the right attitude to survive: if he makes it big, great. If he doesn't, he's got a lot to fall back on. He says he is always searching for different kinds of knowledge, so maybe rock 'n' roll is a passing phase for him. After conquering athletics, academics and the fine arts, maybe he'll become a politician or even an insurance salesman. We'll have to wait and see.

"Teaching and all those other things were just for, you know, gettin' the bills paid so I could hone in on my craft, if I can so put it like that. It's just that it's so difficult and you have to be soooo damn lucky to get into (the music business). You're gettin' paid to do something you really enjoy doing."

'Running'

life spent fleeing the FBI. Living in the underground network of ex-60's radicals, the Pope family is constantly uprooted and on the run, changing cars, slipping into disguises, and adopting new identities.

Committed to the anti-war movement of the 60's, Arthur and Annie had bombed an American napalm factory at the height of the Vietnam War. Blinding and nearly paralyzing a janitor that they did not know would be inside, the blast catapulted the Popes to the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List.

Arthur and Annie dodge the Feds with the kids on tow. They plop their children into a new school and tear them away from their friends every time they move — and they move often.

Obviously, Danny and Harry must get a lot of love and support from their parents, or they wouldn't be able to cope with the strain of life on the road.

But that doesn't explain the dog. Early in the film, with barely a whine or complaint, Harry gives up his dog when the family is forced to make a fast getaway. No ten-year-old gives up his dog without a fight. More importantly, what are two '60s activists doing abandoning a dog along a roadside?

When Danny falls for a girl, Lorna (Martha Plimpton) in one of the Pope's stop-over towns, and begins to explore college options, the family's unity is threatened. If Danny leaves the underground, his family will very likely never see him again.

For the first time, Arthur and Annie are forced to realize that their life on the run cannot continue indefinitely, and that Danny and Harry are being forced to live with the consequences of their parents' actions.

One problem of Running On Empty is that the audience recognizes this basic problem long before Art and Annie do. What are they thinking, we thoughtfully ponder, that their kids will grow old in the underground?

Spunky, defiant, take-no-crap women are de rigueur in today's cinema, and Plimpton has the role down pat (this film reprises the Plimpton-Phoenix relationship of another, better, underdog-fighting-against-the-odds movie, The Mosquito Coast).The young River Phoenix is also great, the perfect awkward 17 year old boy, all feet and confusion.

Almost all of the performances are excellent, creating some kind of emotional crescendo that inevitably results in on-screen waterworks. Annie cries, and cries really well. Arthur doesn't cry, but he gets that stern man-who-is-moved-look (Judd is the weak acting link in this film). Harry gets kind of teary. Lorna cries in a spunky, defiant kind of way. Danny cries with utter abandon.

The audience cries with utter abandon.

Or so I've been told

Maybe people cry because they relate to the Pope's family breakup, or to Arthur and Annie's commitment to ideals that seem to have been lost in the post-Vietnam world, or to the pangs of first love that Danny and Lorna share. Or maybe they cry because they're in a dark, anonymous place, not entirely unlike the Onion Cellar, and are confronted with a tear duct stimulus not entirely unlike an onion.

Running On Empty left me dry-eyed and disappointed. It wasn't worth crying over.

ASTRO•GRAPH

Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Oct. 20, 1988

Several people close to you could be inspirational in improving your lot in life in the year ahead. You'll operate very effectively in the new areas that open up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Your popularity is ascending and wherever you go you are apt to be noticed. Even persons who appear to be unimpressed with you will be. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Today you could be lucky in matters that affect your material interests. Gains are in the offing and might develop unexpectedly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Starting today friends may begin playing more important roles in your affairs. As things begin to unfold, you'll be glad you have a rooting section.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Conditions look extremely promising today where your work or career is concerned. Things that others could not accomplish may prove to be easy victories for you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Circumstances may compel you to make major revisions in your plans. New concepts will be more effective and should bring you the desired results.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Your intuition and perception are extremely keen today, especially in commercial or financial matters. If you operate as your insights direct, you should come out in the black.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) An arrangement you have been anxious to put together looks like it will come about as you've been hoping. The linkage could begin as of today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today's achievements could have far-reaching effects. The peripheral benefits may prove as advantageous as your primary objectives. Elevate your sights and go gunning.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This is one of those days when team effort will offer great rewards. You'll operate more advantageously with someone else than alone.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Your greatest asset today is the ability to transform something that is outmoded into something more efficient and useful. Try to use this gift where your career is concerned.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You should do very well today in situations that are either speculative or have political overtones. In fact, there's a possibility you might be involved in both.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you plan to entertain today, do it in your surroundings rather than someplace outside. You'll be a good host and the event will be memorable.

compared to his predecessor, but he'll probably remain unfazed. Having played basketball since the age of 3, he's used to fulfilling high expectations. "I kind of enjoy pressure," the freshman said. "I had to deal with it in high school. It kind of makes me play better."

Interestingly, Richardson makes him play better, too. After their daily pick-up games, Richardson and Martin go one-on-one in a kind of teacher vs. student match-up. "He really pushes me," Martin said.

Meanwhile, Bruin fans are already dreaming of next year's projected front court of MacLean, Trevor Wilson and Kevin Walker. But MacLean may have other plans. "I can hopefully earn myself a starting spot (this season). I see the opportunity," he said. "I just want to see some good (playing) time this year."

MacLean is expected to battle with junior Walker (7.5 points, 2.5 rebounds a game last season) and senior Charles Rochelin (7.5, 2.8).

Whatever questions there are, Fuller is sure that the newcomers will get their chance. "They will all have an excellent opportunity to get playing time as freshmen," he confirmed.

Looking past this season, it goes without question that Martin and MacLean figure in the Bruins' long-range plans. And, as freshmen are apt to do, Martin and MacLean can't help but look ahead with optimism.

Martin, a computer science major whose parents both work with computers, "would like to get a degree, first of all."

On the court, Martin has even higher aspirations. "I'd like to be an All-American," he said. "Maybe become the best point guard in the country."

Likewise, MacLean has high hopes for himself and his teammates. When asked what he'd like to look back on in four years, MacLean said, "I'd like to have won an NCAA Championship." A few Pac-10 Championships would be nice too, he added.

Personally, MacLean dares to aim even higher: He's already eyeing the NBA. After four successful years at UCLA, "I can hopefully get drafted," he said.

And, if everything turns out just right for Martin and MacLean, who knows? Just maybe you'll hear those names outside the summer afternoon pick-up games.

Martin yo-yoing up and down. . .pass inside to Green. . .over to MacLean...Lakers score!

(UCLA '66) replied, "I was shocked. I didn't think they could do it without me.

Donahue, the former defensive tackle, was unofficially No. 1 for about 30 minutes in 1980, when No. 1 Alabama lost earlier in the day as the No. 2 Bruins took the field to play Arizona. The Wildcats won, 23-17.

Rocking the house: The UCLA women's volleyball team set a weekend Wooden Center attendance record with 3,384 for the two Pac-10 matches with Washington State and Washington. The Bruin season attendance is now over the 30,000 mark, averaging 1,881 a game.

No doubt about it: The women's volleyball team is now the nation's only unbeaten Division I school. Both William & Mary and New Mexico lost last week. The 16-0 start is the third best ever by a Bruin team.

It's good to be the king: Terry Donahue, on whether he thinks opponents will be shooting to knock them off of the top spot: "There is going to be a real focus on beating UCLA—but in all candor, there's always a focus on beating UCLA anyway."

Potential Title—Bestseller?: Found in the University of Wisconsin Bookstore over the past summer—a new book on football co-written by Badger head coach Don Morton.

Entitled "The Veer-Offense of the Eighties," the cover also proclaims that one can "Win anytime, anywhere, with this offense."

Reviews in any publications are nary to be found, but if the play of Wisconsin this season is any indication, then it might be time for serious editing.

The Badgers are currently 0-6, and have been outscored 193-60.

On Wisconsin.....

More on No. 1: Is it too early to get excited about the No. 1 ranking?

Just ask Donahue.

"I don't think the polls mean anything until the ninth, tenth, eleventh week," Donahue told the crowd of reporters at his weekly press luncheon. "If this was the eleventh week or after a bowl game, I'd be up on the table showing you guys my victory jig."

The victory jig, of course, is the dance T.D. does after every UCLA victory, while the team sings the fight song and douses him with soda.

letter to the association to get the ball rolling.

"It's time that I go on record so they know what we're facing," said Horn. "This is the right time since our team is more visible and has (already) had a long and successful year."

Horn added that he was not the only coach who feels this way and also want something to be done.

Sour Grapes?: It seems that Cal, that bruising squad that has knocked off some of the nation's perennial powerhouses—San Jose State, Kansas, Pacific —and finds itself in the Pac-10 cellar, doesn't think UCLA is No. 1.

"If they're No. 1, we should be ranked," said Bear noseguard Majett Whiteside, who stood idly by Homecoming weekend while Troy Aikman threw for 322 yards. Whiteside should be happy that Donahue isn't Jimmy Johnson. The 38-21 score could have been a lot uglier than it got.

Said Aikman, after hearing of the comments, "It doesn't really bother me. We don't really care what they think. Maybe they just don't like UCLA, I don't know. The bottom line is that we won, they lost. We want to win on Saturday, that's all that matters."

On Fire: UCLA's women's volleyball star Daiva Tomkus is leading the Pac-10 in hitting percentage and aces, and is second in the nation in hitting percentage. She also leads the team in kills, blocks, aces, and is second in digs.

Catch the wave: With the loss of Dora "The Franchise" Dome to graduation, the UCLA women's basketball team is looking for a new force to lead the team. But after an exceptional recruiting year, women's hoops looks to be back on the right track.

New Bruin Molly Tideback is the prime candidate for team leader role. Out of Waterloo, Iowa, Tideback is considered as one of the top five recruits in the nation. And if you are wondering whether or not confidence will be a problem for the freshman, stop worrying. After all, Tideback herself has been heard saying, "You can't keep the tide back."

Brutal, Juice, Brutal: The last time the football team was ranked No. 1, in 1967, Heisman Trophy winner Gary Beban and the gutty little Bruins lost 21-20 to USC, which went on to win the national title. The Trojans won after O.J. Simpson pulled off one of the greatest runs of all time, shedding tacklers and rambling 67 yards for the game winning touchdown.

The truth hurts: When asked what he thought when the 1967 team grabbed that No. 1 ranking, Terry Donahue,

Bruin Record Breakers

By Michael Bartlett, Senior Staff Writer

Some members of the 1988 UCLA football team are moving up into rarified air in the school record book. Quarterback Troy Aikman, after just six games, has already moved into the single season Top 10. Aikman is also nearing the top of the career charts. Cornerback Marcus Turner has half of the season left to catch the all-time UCLA greats on the career interceptions list.

Boyko, even after two weeks, likes the Bruins and Wyoming

The Clairvoyant One

Lee Boyko

Last Week: 4 wins, 5 losses

Overall: 8 wins, 8 losses

The only way to prove Notre Dame's top-three status is to sick the Huskies on them. Pass that test and you belong. . . .

The ground did cause Cleveland Gary's fumble on the goal line in South Bend—contrary to Pat Haden's opinion. . .

Notre Dame's Tony Rice proved he doesn't need Oklahoma's system or steroids to be a top-notch player. . . .

WAC-iest game of the season: from the conference that never met a defense it didn't like, Air Force 56, Utah 49. Sixty-three first downs and 1375 yards of offense make this the outrageous game of '88. . . .

So how was this for an Allan Malamud impression?

Nebraska (6-1) -42 1/2 @ Kansas St. (0-6)

State somehow managed 24 points against Oklahoma last week. It's doubtful Nebraska will be that generous. The Huskers should start checking the mail for Social Security benefits, as they seem to break 65 every week. Despite the Sooners' record-setting performance, Nebraska still averages 50 more ground yards a game.
Pick: Nebraska

Wyoming (7-0) -24 @ Utah (2-4)

With more wins than any team in football, the Cowboys are bidding for the title of America's team. Their high-tech passing offense (534 yards per game, third nationally) is the brainchild of Paul Roach. Coach Roach (or is it Roach Coach?) has made the Laramie faithful block out hoops. Fennis who? Wonder if they're going to scream for the same kind of national championship won by the last undefeated WAC school, the '84 BYU Cougars.
Pick: Wyoming

Arkansas (6-0) @ Houston (4-1) pick'em

No joke, that was a score not a date. Houston 82, Tulsa 28. It was 75-zip after three frames. The Cougars break 500 yards a game. Arkansas thumped Texas worse than the 27-24 score indicates. The Razorbacks' liberalized offensive scheme has made sophomore QB Quinn Grovey the double threat Greg Thomas wasn't.
Pick: Arkansas

Air Force (5-2) @ Notre Dame (6-0) -17

Notre Dame will undoubtedly pull the plug on the Falcons' 46-point average. Dee Dowis and Tony Rice lock horns in a match-up of elite rushing QBs. Air Force, with a nation-leading 432 rushing yards a game, is probably not physical enough to match Irish pound for pound. Notre Dame stuffed Miami's rushing game, granting 2 yards a carry. Drug testers can unplug their machines for this contest.
Pick: Notre Dame

Washington (4-2) -3 @ Oregon (5-1)

Oregon got to break in hobbled QB Bill Musgrave against potato-head Idaho State. Health permitting, Musgrave could bury the Huskies in their third-straight road game. Washington, the school that endorses Rodney Peete for the Heisman, is riding a three-game win streak against the number. Had Cary Conklin not been too careful with a pass on a two-point conversion, Washington might have knocked off SC.
Pick: Washington

Indiana (5-0-1) @ Michigan (3-2-1) -7

A mirage? A figment of unbridled psychoactivity? A Big-10 team that actually looks good? Hoosiermania has struck the Midwest. Coach Bill Mallory, pursuing his third consecutive Big-10 Coach of the Year Award, continues to work magic with a program that was 0-11 in '84. In tying Iowa, Michigan blew a chance to show that its nail-biters against Miami and Notre Dame were for real. Winner has inside track on the Roses (short stem, of course).
Pick: Indiana

Oklahoma (5-1) -12 1/2 @ Colorado (5-1)

Passing could actually be more foreign to the Buffaloes than to Oklahoma. Colorado's backfield is every bit as explosive as OU's but lacks the building blocks of success up front. Back-to-back 70-point performances are not out of the question for the Sooners. Oklahoma's 768 yards rushing against Kansas St. was an NCAA record.
Pick: Oklahoma

Penn St. (4-2) @ Alabama (4-1) -5

The Cowardly Lions and the Crimson Died. Both should be underdogs in this slop fest. Four national championships between them in the last 10 years, but either will be lucky to intrude on the top 20 in '88. Penn State showed no vital signs against Syracuse, and Alabama wants to hang its carpetbagger coach.
Pick: Penn State

UCLA (6-0) -9 @ Arizona (4-2)

Last time the Bruins were No. 1 it lasted only one week, and they haven't gone undefeated in conference play since belonging to the AAWU. Bah-humbug. The Bruins just have to avoid major gaffes and look presidential to win. SC mangled the Wildcats a few weeks ago in Tucson. No reason to think the Bruins can't do the same.
Pick: UCLA

RAY MARRERO/Daily Bruin

Brian Brown's return should certainly aid UCLA's chances in Tucson this weekend. Prognasticator Lee Boyko sees no problem for the Bruins to cover the spread.

ly on.

Days after the Cal game, the Bruins were still buzzing over the contested match. Not only was the officiating suspect, but the level of rough play allowed appeared to be excessive. In general, UCLA and the Southern California teams play a more finesse game than the Bears, who thrive on a physical game.

In turn, it seems as if the games are more tightly officiated (i.e. more penalty ejections) in the south. For example, in the USC-UCLA game two weeks ago, over 15 major penalties were called in regulation time, whereas in the UCLA-Cal match less than 10 were called in a contest which had six minutes of overtime.

"(The Cal contest) was the most physical game we've had all year long," said UCLA head coach Bob Horn. "If the officiating had been (tough) early, then it wouldn't have been as physical later on."

One needs to look no further than the stitches on Bruins Marcelo Carsalade and Javier Escobar to realize how brutal the match really was.

Looking forward to today's contest, Horn mentioned that the Waves are redshirting many of their top players.

"This is not the regular Pepperdine team, but we are motivated enough to continue improving our style of play and increase our effectiveness," Horn said.

Scoring should not be a problem for the Bruins, as the duo of senior Hank Peterson (53 goals) and junior Alex Rousseau (51) lead the offensive attack. Senior Scott Leonard (26 goals), junior Mark Maretzki (21), and sophomore Escobar (20) will also be gunning for the net.

Other than the flip-flop between UCLA and California, the remainder of the national rankings remained the same as last week. The current top ten is as follows: No. 1 Cal (19-2), No. 2 UCLA (18-2), No. 3 Stanford (15-6), No. 4 USC (13-3), No. 5 CS Long Beach (9-5), No. 6 UC Irvine (9-6), No. 7 UC Santa Barbara (the Bruins' opponent on Sunday) (13-4), No. 8 UC San Diego (8-8), and a tie for ninth between Pepperdine (6-6) and Fresno State (7-12).

WHERE FINE MINDS MANAGE INNOVATION

Are UCLA students fans, or just spectators?

Oh Yeah

Todd Williams

We're number one! I guess.

You couldn't figure that out from the atmosphere around campus, though. Maybe it's that the season is just half way over or that we still have our toughest game of the year ahead of us. But no one seems to care that we have the best football team in the country.

Coach Donahue and his players have been wisely cautious, yet still one might think that the campus would be a little more excited, considering that we haven't been in this position since before most of us were eating solid food.

What's the rally committee doing, besides a lame card show at halftime in two weeks? Let's hope they come up with something better than last year's sparsely attended "Beat USC" rally held on the Monday before the game.

But the rally committee shouldn't shoulder the majority of the blame since the student body appears to be fairly apathetic towards our success. The "We're Number One" chant against Cal last weekend died quickly, and any organized cheering met with little support. The cheerleaders even got to the point of using a soft sell approach, telling fans (I'm quoting roughly), "If you feel like yelling, great; if you don't that's okay, too."

Whatever our fans lack or are missing is present in places like Lincoln, South Bend, Miami, Seattle, and Ann Arbor. Perhaps it's because there's more to do here, unlike Oklahoma, where football is king. Well, fine for Oklahoma, but what about Miami, where screaming fans are the norm. Some say that it's our laid back Southern California attitude that keeps us from painting our bodies blue and gold and yelling drunken cheers and obscenities at the opposing team, but things are getting serious. Even members of the Bruin team itself had hoped for a little more consistent support in the stands.

I suppose that we shouldn't get overconfident, but hopefully vocal UCLA fans will turn out. Unfortunately, even if we're still No. 1 the next time we play in the Rose Bowl, we'll be lucky if the seats are three-quarters full.

The road to the national championship appears to be narrowed down to six teams with UCLA, Notre Dame, USC, Miami, and dark horses West Virginia and Arkansas. The Mountaineers have a great chance of going undefeated with Boston College, Penn St., Cincinnati, Rutgers, and Syracuse left on their schedule. But undefeated may not be good enough, as only a collapse by all the top four will give them or the Razorbacks any shot. If Arkansas can get by Houston (a team which scored 82 points last week), it should cruise until Nov. 26 when it faces the Hurricanes in Miami.

The Bruins have tough road ahead of them, still having to face Arizona and Oregon away, and the finale against the Trojans at the Rose Bowl.

The Fighting Irish should cruise through Air Force, Navy, Rice, and Penn State until they meet USC the week after the Rose Bowl clash. The Trojans will enjoy some creampuffs before being tested by the Bruins and Notre Dame.

Miami has to get by high school squads like Cincinnati, East Carolina, and Tulsa before facing some legitimate teams like LSU, Arkansas, and BYU. Even though they will go up against some competition, the hardest thing left for the Hurricanes will be to decide whether to go to the Fiesta or Orange Bowl.

fers from Duke, Arizona and UNLV.

When Hazzard was fired and replaced by Harrick, Martin's father attempted to get the letter-of-intent invalidated by the NCAA. When that failed, Martin's father threatened to send Martin to a junior college.

"It was a hectic time for me," Martin said, seeming a bit reluctant to discuss the matter. Fortunately for the Bruins, any differences the two parties had were worked out.

"After getting to know Coach Harrick, I realized the situation (at UCLA) was still a good situation for me," Martin said.

MacLean's pick-up team, complete with Miller and John Williams, had just lost and Martin's team was back out on the Men's Gym floor, as the 6'10" forward from Simi Valley began to talk about his own recruiting ordeal.

At Simi Valley High, MacLean's accomplishments drew the attention of some of the country's greatest college basketball powers. As a senior, he led the Pioneers to the CIF 4A title, averaging 31.5 points and 12.4 rebounds a game. He locked up 4A Player of the Year honors for the second time and was named first-team McDonald's All-American and second-team Parade All-American.

Thus it was no wonder that schools like Kentucky, Pittsburgh, Georgia Tech, UNLV and UCLA all vied to sign him. Rumors swirled, though, that MacLean wanted to play for UCLA, but not for Hazzard. It will probably never be known if the MacLean situation had anything to do with Hazzard's departure. Soon after Hazzard was out, however, MacLean was in.

"Now that there's a new coach, it's kind of a new start for everything," MacLean said. "Hopefully, with me and Darrick Martin and Darren Dafney Dafney, we can start bringing in some more good players."

Assistant coach Tony Fuller seems satisfied—for now—with the three star freshmen. "I'm very happy they're all at UCLA," he said. "They're very good players, but more importantly, they're good people and good students."

Perhaps, as MacLean said, this could be just the first of many good recruiting years at UCLA. Right now, though, Bruin fans are eager to see what two prep All-Americans can do about improving last year's 16-14 record.

Although Martin insists that he'll never be rushed along," the absence of sophomore guard Gerald Madkins opens up a starting job in the Bruins' back court. Madkins suffered a fractured pelvis in a scooter accident this summer, so Martin is expected to fight for the starting off-guard spot with sophomore Kevin Williams (10 points in 20 minutes last season) and freshman Dafney. "Now I have a good chance of starting," Martin said.

Next year, of course, Martin will try to fill the Reeboks of UCLA's career assist leader, Pooh Richardson. "I want to be a leader out on the floor and distribute the basketball," Martin said.

Undoubtedly, Martin will be

Spikers go five at UCSB, but win

By Sam Chon

SANTA BARBARA—What appeared to be the UCLA women's volleyball team traveled to UC Santa Barbara last night to face the Big West's very own Gauchos, looking for its 17th straight victory of the season.

However, Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski may have loaded the wrong team on the bus to make the trip.

The team that Banachowski did bring didn't show the qualities of the only undefeated Division I team in the nation. Rather, it looked more like the Bruin team that lost to the Gauchos last season at Pauley Pavilion.

And yet, despite a very sluggish effort, UCLA was able to come home with a five-set, 13-15, 15-11, 15-4, 12-15, 15-4 win to move to 17-0 on the season.

The Gauchos were able to take the Bruins in game one, even though UCLA's Samantha Shaver served five straight points to start the match.

Only through a little perserverance and a lot of Santa Barbara errors did UCLA make up the deficit in game two.

The real Bruins finally stood up in game three, when UCLA came back and smoked the Gauchos with consistent play all-around. Senior setter Ann Boyer took charge of the lackluster team and brought around a 15-4 victory.

The Bruins all but gave away game four to the Gauchos, forcing a fifth and deciding game—only the second five-game match for UCLA all season. The Gauchos walked away with a 12-15 in game four.

Ultimately, the burden of bringing some composure and poise to the team and pulling out a win to maintain the longest UCLA winning streak since 1983 lay on the shoulders of Boyer. She responded by leading her team to a 15-4 win.

Harrick will bank on Martin and MacLean

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

Darrick Martin yo-yoing up and down, being hounded by Michael Cooper. . .great pass inside to A.C. Green. . .stolen by Don MacLean!. . .outlet to Reggie Miller...slaaaam dunk!

Someday, you might hear the names of UCLA freshmen Darrick Martin and Don MacLean interspersed with those of NBA players. If you missed that action at the daily, pro-frequented pick-up games in Pauley Pavilion this summer, however, don't worry.

Come November, you can catch high school All-Americans Martin and MacLean in their first intercollegiate games. They've already scored some points with UCLA basketball followers, without even putting on Bruin uniforms.

Martin and MacLean seem to represent a fresh start for the entire UCLA basketball program, spearheaded by new head coach Jim Harrick. Last spring, the newly hired Harrick, professing a new era for UCLA basketball, put his scholarship money where his mouth was in landing prep phenoms Martin and MacLean, along with All-City star Darrin Dafney.

"This is a good start for the program," Martin said. He was between pick-up games in the Men's Gym. His team, which featured Cooper, Mike Smrek and Green, had just lost.

Martin, for one, isn't accustomed to losing at any level. The 5'11½" point guard from Compton was named CIF 5A Player of the Year last season at St. Anthony High in Long Beach. He averaged 33.4 points, 8.7 assists and 4 rebounds a game in his senior year, which also earned him first-team All-America honors from McDonald's and Parade magazine.

UCLA came very close, however, to losing the recruiting battle for Martin, one of the top three high school point guards in the country. Last spring, he signed a letter-of-intent to play at UCLA under then-coach Walt Hazzard—a close friend of the Martin family—turning down of-

Horn has a beef with refs

Tales of No. 1, the Juice and all

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

UCLA water polo coach Bob Horn is upset.

Why, you ask?

Because what he sees as controversial and perhaps biased officiating seems to be becoming a disturbing tradition whenever UCLA travels to Cal to play water polo. The trouble seems to stem from the two very different styles of play used by the two schools—and, more generally, the whole state.

On the Beat: A UCLA Notebook

In Northern California, a physical strategy dominates, while in Southern California, a finesse game is played. When the two styles meet, one team inevitably comes out on the short end. In general, major fouls, which are basically equivalent to penalties in hockey (a player is allowed three before he is ejected for good), are called more liberally in games between southern squads, whereas in northern games a "kick-out" is harder to come by.

To add to the problem, the referees used in north-south games usually come from the area of the game and know the players of the home schools. As a result, charges of possible bias are that much easier to make.

At this point, Horn has had about as much as he can handle. Two of his players came away from last Saturday's 8-7 overtime loss in Berkeley with stitches, and others were hurting. He is suggesting that the disparity in the officiating be reconciled at the Referee Association National Convention, but he intends to write a

Pepperdine at UCLA today

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

The UCLA men's water polo team will attempt to rebound from last Saturday's controversial loss to Cal, as it hosts Pepperdine today at 3 p.m. at Sunset Rec.

Due to the 8-7 overtime defeat, the Bruins (18-2 overall, 1-2 in the conference) dropped to No. 2 in the national rankings while the 19-2 Bears moved into the top spot.

The Waves, today's foe, are off to a slow 6-6 start and are currently ranked ninth along with Fresno State. Facility problems over the summer and the absence of its head coach, Olympic team captain Terry Schroder, may be leading causes of Pepperdine's mediocrity. Last season, the Waves were marked by a potent but inconsistent offense and an erratic defense.

UCLA was victorious, 15-6, in the only previous meeting of the season with Pepperdine and was 4-1 against the Waves last season, the only loss coming ear-

Large growth predicted for UC, little for UCLA

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — UCLA is expected to maintain current enrollment levels through the year 2005, despite large growth projections for many University of California campuses, said UC President David Gardner Thursday.

Gardner, addressing the Board of Regents, cited housing shortages, traffic congestion and the lack of buildable land as the primary reasons for limiting growth at UCLA.

"Significant growth is not needed to enhance UCLA's program or its well-established international reputation, and would in any event be very difficult to manage in its tightly constrained physical environment," Gardner said.

Projections for long-range growth at UCLA include an increase of 526 students be-

UC officials forcast future faculty shortage

SAN FRANCISCO — Nearly half of the 8,000 current University of California faculty members are expected to retire by the year 2000, UC officials announced Thursday at a Regents policy meeting.

Inadequate faculty pools are also expected, coupled with intense competition among the universities for high-quality faculty.

According to UC President David Gardner, "the only way to increase the size of the pool available for the nation is to prepare significantly larger numbers of graduate students to enter academic careers than is the case today, and UC will have to play a major role in fulfilling that objective."

UC will need to hire about 10,200 new faculty during the next 17 years, the Regents announced.

UCLA's university seals stolen

Three emblems, valued at $2000, vanished this month

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

When Chancellor Charles Young speaks to new students at the freshman assembly Wednesday, something will be different.

That's because the lectern he plans to stand behind will probably not bear the University of California seal.

And that's because the seal has been stolen.

In fact, all three university seals owned by UCLA were stolen sometime this month, according to campus police. Exactly when, officials don't know. Exactly by whom, officials aren't sure.

Looking for back orders

The three seals bearing the words, "The University of California" and "Let There Be Light" cannot be replaced in time for the chancellor's assembly. Campus property officials are searching their files for the most recent purchase orders, which are about 20 years old.

"Those seals aren't like a quart of milk or a loaf of bread — you don't buy them every day," said James Klain, director of UCLA Campus Activities Service Office.

However, CASO officials are confident they will find the order forms. But they do not expect to reorder in time for the chancellor's 20-minute speech Wednesday before an expected audience of 1,800 students.

Klain said it takes several days to recast the seals, which are valued collectively at $2,000.

Nonetheless, CASO officials are asking the new and unlawful owners of the seals to return them promptly. No questions asked.

UC Police Department investigators had no leads Thursday.

UC may add 3 campuses by end of century

New sites will be necessary to admit growth

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Three campuses could be added to the University of California system by the turn of the century if demand for a UC education keeps increasing, UC President David Gardner told the Board of Regents Thursday.

"It is going to be difficult to accommodate the growth," Gardner said. "And it will be an enormous task to develop campuses of the same quality we have at the present time."

The Regents expect demand for a UC education to increase by 63,000 students (See graph 1). However, projections indicate that only 43,000 can be accommodated on existing campuses. The remainder would have to matriculate elsewhere, presumably at the new locations.

The first new campus would open its doors in 1998 (See graph 2), pending community approval and adequate funding from the state's much depleted resources. Subsequent campuses would open in 1999 and 2000.

Cities interested in having one of the campuses include Fort Bragg, Fresno, Modesto, Merced, Mariposa, Redding and Redbluff, according to a report from the Regents' Office. The Regents have neither set sites for the campuses nor established criteria for choosing them.

"It is true that siting a campus in a given community and region has a much greater effect on that community than on the state as a whole," Gardner said.

"Therefore, we would seek to locate the campuses only in those communities and regions that would welcome them and could accommodate them."

At a press conference, William Baker, vice president of budget and university relations, estimated each new campus would require about $300 million to build.

According to Baker, the university operating budget must grow about 4 percent per year compounded to accommodate projected increases in enrollment, even without the creation of new campuses. This would only be feasible if California's current appropriations limit (the so-called "Gann limit") is modified, allowing the state to spend more of the money it receives.

"It is the spirit and vision of the people of California that build this great university. I have confidence that the same spirit of today's California will build the UC of the future," Baker said.

No decisions could be reached by the Regents at Thursday's policy meeting, and several of the Regents expressed concern that there were other options not discussed which could better solve the problem of bludgeoning enrollment.

Much of the apprehension articulated by the regents concern whether there is a need for new campuses when there is still room on many existing campuses.

According to projected figures, the university will reach its capacity in 1999 (graph) and might be forced to turn students away were additional space or campuses not provided.

Gardner insisted, however, that the UC system will remain true to the Master Plan of Higher Education, which commits the system to provide a place for all UC-eligible students in the top 12½ percent of their high school graduating class.

"Insofar as every eligible student will be admitted to the campus of their first choice, or to the major of their first choice, that is a promise we have never made," Garnder said.

Solving 'mysteries' with a skeptical eye

Group examines Bermuda Triangle, other phenomena

By M. Radevich
Staff Writer

The Bermuda Triangle

Upon this earth there is a window to another dimension in time or space, through which extraterrestrials can penetrate at will. This opening is called the Bermuda Triangle. Humans are being kidnaped from this area by UFOs and are collected for space zoos or for experimentation.

Charles Berlitz expresses this belief in his book "The Bermuda Triangle." Al Seckel, executive director of the Southern Californian Skeptics organization offers another explanation for the disappearances: "You can make a mystery out of anything by leaving out half the facts."

In the second lecture of the skeptics' "science and the paranormal" series, supernatural claims concerning the Bermuda Triangle were addressed, discussed and resolved — with a logical explanation.

"The only unsolved mysteries of the Bermuda Triangle are those in which there is not enough information," said speaker Dr. John Mosley, program and educational supervisor of the Griffith Observatory. "When there is sufficient information, there is a logical reason for what happened."

In his book, Berlitz discusses the mystery of a plane which disappeared without a trace. Mosley suggests that the mystery would not be as compelling if Berlitz had not overlooked one fact — witnesses saw the plane explode. Commander William Lawrence of the US Coast Guard testified that the crew of the SS Gains Mills observed what appeared to be a plane catch on fire in the air and quickly hit the water and explode, Mosley said.

Mosley's information, delivered a bit sarcastically, was greeted with a cheer and a laugh from the skeptics who gathered in Young Hall Tuesday night. The large lecture room was almost half full — a good showing for regularly scheduled classes, let alone a nighttime lecture.

Yet compared to crowds of hundreds which the club drew to lectures at Caltech, the UCLA turnout was quite small, perhaps because the group is new to campus this quarter. Yet small should not be confused with blase, as skeptic after skeptic laughed at the slashing and pounding that logic gave to age-old unsubstantiated beliefs.

Mosley's next target was the famous 1945 case of Flight 19, in which a group of Navy Planes disappeared, presumably in the Bermuda Triangle.

According to Berlitz, on a day with pleasant weather and sea conditions, a pilot and his crew, all experienced airmen, vanished while flying over the triangle. Before disappearing, the pilot radioed in that his compasses were not working.

"The pilot, Taylor, was the only experienced person there. The others were students in training," Mosely explained. "A Navy investigation that took months and totaled 400 pages stated that Taylor was new to the area and became disoriented, something he had done in the past.

"It seems that he thought that he was flying over the Florida

UCLA screenwriting program chairman discusses business, art of film scripts

By David Mori
Staff Writer

The following interview was interrupted several times by students who wanted their permission-to-enroll slips signed by Richard Walter, a professor in the theater, film and television department and chairman of the screenwriting program.

The kinds of students Walter wants in his screenwriting classes are those who will "love and respect" their audience, and he talks about this theme in his new book entitled, "Screenwriting: the Art, Craft and Business of Film and Television Writing."

Claiming his new book is Aristotle's "poetics" for film and television, Walter, in a relaxed and informal tone, covers all aspects of film and television writing.

The book is not a step-by-step guide on how to become rich as a screenwriter. Instead, Walter speaks to the reader, sharing his personal point of view about the art of screenwriting. He wants the reader to realize that everything he writes merits attention from an audience.

"Good films merit the time, consideration and ticket price of an audience," says Walter, who wrote the first two screenplays for "American Graffiti."

Richard Walter

When asked if he was sacrificing art for commerciality, Walter responded by admitting that the UCLA film department is commercial and mainstream, as was William Shakespeare.

According to Walter, Shakespeare was commercial, because his works were entertaining — not remote works, but popular. "They were the hits of the day," Walter claims.

Though the films from the UCLA department may be "commercial," Walter says they have not been "Hollywood fare."

And evidence comes from works written by former UCLA students, including "The River's Edge," "The Principal" and "Stand and Deliver." An exception to this list is "Robocop," according to Walter.

These works also indicate that UCLA's film and television department ranks number one in the nation, according to Walter, who graduated from the University of Southern California film school.

"It is a demonstrable fact," he says. "UCLA students are the most successful by far. They are the most frequently integrated into the commercial community."

Walter believes there is an opportunity at UCLA to get into the film business, because the university lies in "the heart of the . . . film community.

"Should we ignore or exploit it?" Walter asks. "We ought to address the immediate concerns of the film community. There is too much of scholars talking to scholars. We're not about that. We don't think it's a sin to be successful or to make money."

The best way to become a successful screenwriter is to Libertarian presidential candidate offers vision for America's future

By David Mori

"Haven't you had enough?" asks Libertarian presidential candidate Ron Paul.

Paul, who is on the ballot in 47 states including California, believes Vice President George Bush and Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis are afraid to speak the truth. "They refuse to talk about issues," he says.

This is why Ron Paul wants to be president, and his version of America, achieved by adopting the Libertarian philosophy of limited government, differs significantly from that offered by Dukakis and Bush. "It's important for the American people to have a choice," he says.

According to Paul, the majority of the American people do not agree with either candidates. "There are no choices in Democrats or Republicans," he says.

Paul is "optimistic" about his bid for the presidency. "Sixteen years ago," the Libertarian Party was on the ballot in only two states. This year, we are on the ballot in 47 states . . . In the 1990s, we will be a dominant party," he proclaims.

As a former Republican congressman from Houston, Texas, Paul was elected four times from 1976 to 1984. In 1984, he made a bid to

U.S. troops may leave S. Korea, Reagan says

By W. Dale Nelson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Thursday he sees the possibility that the United States could withdraw troops from South Korea in the near future, but the State Department's top Far Eastern specialist said there is "certainly no intention" to do so.

The president, entering a meeting with South Korean President Roh Tae-woo, was asked by a reporter if he could "envision a time in the near future when the U.S. would be reducing its military presence."

Reagan said, "That is a possibility, but it would not be one of us just withdrawing — it would be one of (being) no longer needed."

The United States has long had about 42,000 troops stationed in South Korea under a mutual defense pact.

Gaston Segur, assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs, asked after the meeting about Reagan's remarks, said the two presidents did not discuss the subject of troop reduction.

"We are not talking about anything taking place at any particular time," Segur said. "We have no intention of anything of that sort."

"We would have to have a firm belief on the part of our country and the Republic of Korea that the threat from North Korea was over," he said. "That threat is not over. We have certainly no intention of changing our policy of maintaining our ground forces in South Korea."

Korean Embassy children and Roh supporters waved flags as Roh entered Blair House, the presidential guest quarters, before meeting Reagan. In nearby Lafayette Park, about 50 people staged a noisy demonstration against Roh's government and the U.S. military presence in South Korea. The demonstrators' oriental drums, clashing cymbals and chants of "Roh Tae-woo, Out, Out, Out. U.S. Troops, Out, Out, Out," were audible as the visiting presidential party entered the White House.

When asked if he detected any indications that the need for the troops was lessening, Reagan replied, "I couldn't

Inflation strikes Soviet Union

Reforms cause rise in wages, prices

By Ann Imse, Associated Press

MOSCOW — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's economic reforms have begun to produce the unwelcome side-effect of inflation, a top government statistician said Thursday.

The official, Nikolai G. Belov, deputy director of the state committee on statistics, said his department has not yet figured out how to measure inflation and therefore doesn't know how serious it is. But he acknowledged that wages rose nearly twice as fast as real income, a clear indication of inflationary forces in the economy.

Soviet officials traditionally have contended that inflation did not exist in the Soviet Union, where wages and prices are controlled by central planners.

In other communist countries, including Yugoslavia, Poland and China, attempts to ease central controls on the economy and permit the establishment of a market pricing system have led to runaway inflation.

Fears of similar problems in the Soviet system may explain Gorbachev's hesitation in implementing price reform, which he has said is a critical element of his modernization program.

Belov, speaking to reporters at a briefing, said his department would begin calculating inflation next year.

The closest he would come to offering a figure Thursday was to say that while wages rose 6.7 percent in the first nine months of the year, "real income, including hidden price hikes," rose at little over half that rate, or 3.5 percent.

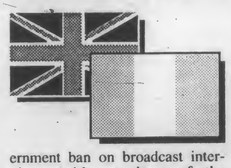
Britain cracks down on Irish suspects' rights

By Maureen Johnson
Associated Press



LONDON — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government announced Thursday it will abolish the right of suspects in Northern Ireland to remain silent under police questioning, ending a centuries-old pillar of British jurisprudence.

The latest measure in Britain's crackdown on the Irish Republican Army provoked outcries that historic civil liberties are crumbling in Britain and followed Wednesday's government ban on broadcast interviews with members of the outlawed IRA and 10 other militant groups in Northern Ireland.

In the House of Commons, the government put forward legislation — expected to take effect early next year — to end the right to silence in Northern Ireland, and said it planned to introduce similar restrictions in England and Wales.

"Members of terrorist organizations are being trained to refuse to respond to questions put by the police — and this technique is increasingly being adopted by those suspected of serious crimes, including racketeering," Northern Ireland Secretary Tom King said.

"Justice is being thwarted," he said.

Groups use thousands of balloons to raise money

MONE ALLARD

Students gather around the Bruin statue Thursday to participate in the Balloon Pop, an event in which participants paid a dollar to pop a balloon in hopes of winning prizes donated by Westwood merchants.

Fraternity and sorority end week-long drive for charity

Two UCLA Greek organizations plan to release a 1,000-foot-long string of balloons today to raise funds for the UCLA Medical Center's Child Development Program and the Sylvia Olshan Health Center in Los Angeles.

Kappa Sigma fraternity and Sigma Kappa sorority will collect donations for the ballons and attach them one by one to a string, said event chair Peter Yang.

The balloons will eventually build a 1,000-foot-high column in the sky by the Bruin Bear, Yang said. The string will be released at 4 p.m. today, he added.

The "Up, Up, and Away!" Balloon Launch will conclude a week of fundraisers by the two Greek groups to raise funds for the development and health centers. On Thursday, the groups held a Balloon Pop, in which participants paid one dollar to pop a balloon with a chance of winning prizes donated by Westwood merchants.

The medical center's 18-year-old child development center serves children with chronic illnesses in their psychological and social developments, according to the program's Administrative Director Mary Fauver. The Olshan Center is an ambulatory unit for the elderly, according to Debbie Young, a Sigma Kappa member.

CAN YOUR COMPUTER WRITE YOUR BOOK OR THESIS FOR YOU?

With RiteSort, a computer program for writers, it almost can. You have a word processor; now you need an IDEA processor and an IDEA processor that does more than just make an outline.

ORGANIZE
RiteSort is an IDEA processor for almost any PC. It organizes your subject matter, so that you can write each part of your thesis, book, term paper, whatever by individual topics that you select. Once you get RiteSort, you'll never touch a 3 x 5 card again. Put all of your research on your computer with your word processor—in the same format you now use for index cards—then sort it out by your outline, not by some contrived data base key, or word search that you might have to use on expensive data base programs designed for business use.

WRITE
RiteSort will let you spend your time writing, not sorting index cards. Nobody goes to college to be a file clerk. Besides, RiteSort is a better file clerk than you will ever be. Menu driven; NO codes to learn.

PS: RiteSort does footnotes—without interrupting your thoughts with computer codes—and bibliographies, too.

INDEX
And that's not all, RiteDex, another program for writers, prepares indices and tables of contents. And it does this after you have pagination, not while you are busy writing. Lots of word processors prepare an index. With RiteDex, you'll never have to make an index on index cards or on your word processor. Does the table of contents, too. Menu driven.

TO ORDER
Both programs are from RiteTech Software, Inc. PO Box 712 Monmouth, Ill. 61462. RiteSort is $79.95, RiteDex $59.95, both for a $30 saving, $109.50. Send SASE for brochure and license agreement.

Feminist attorney barred from Friars Club roast

By Kiley Armstrong
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A female member of the California Friars Club was refused entry to an all-male roast for Ernest Borgnine on Thursday after announcing a discrimination complaint against the New York Friars Club.

Attorney Gloria Allred of Los Angeles said the club's executive director, Jean Pierre Trebot, denied her request to purchase a ticket because the event at the Sheraton Centre ballroom featured rough language and dirty jokes.

When she tried to enter the roast without a ticket, she was pushed back by a man who refused to give his name but said he represented the club.

"Why don't you act like a lady?" he snarled.

Female reporters for the New York Post and The Associated Press also were ordered outside by security guards. A male reporter from Columbia University went inside without a ticket and sat at the board of governors' table, where he was allowed to remain after identifying himself.

"These men-only gatherings have been an annual tradition of the Friars for the past 38 years," the club said in a statement. "The jokes are risque and the language usually quite spicy, as a dais of celebrity comedians throw their barbs at the guest of honor."

"It is our feeling that these separate luncheon functions are no different than the individual men and women events often scheduled by private clubs," it said.

"While we admire Allred's endeavors in the interest of equal rights and ending discriminatory membership practices at private clubs, we feel her efforts to attend this year's stag luncheon are motivated by a desire to secure media attention for herself."

Allred, who joined the California Friars in May 1987, filed a sex discrimination charge last year after she was barred from having lunch in the New York club. After the ruling, the club began admitting some female members, including Liza Minnelli, Joan Rivers and Brooke Shields.

Allred dined at the club on Aug. 26 — the day after the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a New York City ordinance prohibiting such discrimination. After lunch, she noticed the "men only" roast flyer on the wall. She began a series of efforts to attend.

"I'm here to do business. I'd like to have access to the business contacts I could make here. This is a palace of power," said Allred. "I will therefore file another charge of sex discrimination against the New York Friars Club" with the commission.

FAA orders safety tests on nearly 2,000 planes

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Aviation Administration on Thursday ordered immediate tests of takeoff alarm systems on nearly 2,000 Boeing 727 and Boeing 737 jetliners after finding "a significant number" of the alarms not working properly.

The takeoff alarms are a critical safety device because they warn pilots if they have improperly set instruments or control devices during takeoff.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) told the airlines they must conduct the tests immediately and continue the checks every 200 flight hours to protect against possible failure.

Last year the failure of pilots to set their flaps properly led to the crash of a Northwest Airlines jet at Detroit, killing 156 people. Investigators also say a similar oversight remains a possibility in the crash of a Delta Air Lines Boeing 727 at Detroit last August in which 14 people were killed.

According to industry figures there were 1,148 Boeing 727 aircraft and 634 Boeing 737 aircraft being operated by major U.S. airlines at the beginning of this year.

Airlines operating large numbers of Boeing 727s include American Airlines (164), United Airlines (135), Delta Air Lines, (132), Eastern Airlines (122) and Continental Airlines (112), according to the ATA statistics. Continental, Delta, United, Piedmont Airlines, USAir and Southwest Airline are among the users of significant numbers of Boeing 737s.

Priest denounces Vatican order

By Rich Cartiere, Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A priest sentenced by the Vatican to spend a year in silence because of his unorthodox blend of New Age thinking and Catholic doctrine denounced the order as "institutional violence" on Thursday, but said he would follow it as long as he could.

"I have to wrestle with my conscience everyday, and the issues that I have been dealing with are of such grave concern that I do not know what the eventual outcome will be," the Rev. Matthew Fox said during a news conference.

However, the internationally known author and lecturer lashed out at the punishment, calling it the act of a dying patriarchy already demonstrating "the characteristics of a dysfunctional family."

"The news is not that one more theologian has been silenced, but that the Vatican has grown deaf — deaf to the cries of Mother Earth, deaf to the cries of women, of native peoples, of young persons . . . ," he said in a slight and occasionally trembling voice.

The order from the Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of Faith takes effect Dec. 15 and prohibits the 47-year-old founder of the Institute for Culture and Creation Spirituality from preaching, lecturing or teaching.

The Dominican theologian said he will take a six-month sabbatical at the suggestion of his superiors, during which he will travel to Latin America. He did not say what his plans would be after that.

Fox reserved his most heated criticism for Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, head of the Vatican office that reviewed his teachings for four and a half years.

The priest said Ratzinger's objections to "creation spirituality" were "unbelievably thin."

Fox suggested the Catholic Church will die as an institution unless it adopts democratic practices, and admitted he eventually may be forced to renounce his priesthood because of his views.

"The very act of silencing theologians instead of engaging them in dialogue is a sign of institutional violence," he said.

British ban TV, radio interviews with IRA

By Michael West
Associated Press

LONDON — A government ban went into effect today on British television and radio interviews with the Irish Republican Army and 10 nationalist and Protestant groups involved in Northern Ireland's sectarian conflict.

News reports today indicated further restrictions are in the offing to try to curb the recent rise in guerrilla activity.

Sinn Fein, the outlawed IRA's legal political wing, compared the ban announced Wednesday by the government with Soviet bloc censorship. In addition to the IRA, the ban includes Sinn Fein and four Protestant groups.

IRA guerrillas seek to end British rule in predominantly Protestant Northern Ireland and unite it with the Roman Catholic Republic of Ireland under socialist rule. Most Protestants oppose uniting with the Republic.

Home Secretary Douglas Hurd, the Cabinet member responsible for law and order and broadcasting among other matters, on Wednesday told the House of Commons:

"The government has decided that the time has now come to deny this easy platform to those who use it to propagate terrorism."

Junior Home Office minister of state Timothy Renton explained Wednesday night that "the whole aim of this (ban) . . . is to remove that extra weapon — the ability to go on television immediately afterwards to speak in justification of an explosion or a bomb."

Appearances by Sinn Fein President Gerry Adams and other Irish nationalist leaders on British television in recent years have enraged many viewers.

Adams is a member of the British House of Commons. But in accordance with long-standing IRA practice, he has never taken his seat since first being elected for west Belfast in 1983.

The Republic of Ireland has banned TV and radio interviews with the IRA, Sinn Fein and other groups since the mid-1970s.

Sinn Fein seeks to convince mainland Britain that British security forces in Northern Ireland cannot curb the sectarian and political violence there, and that British forces should be

RIGHTS: Irish suspects

At present, courts are not allowed to take into consideration that a suspect refused to answer police questions.

King said under the new law a judge will be able to draw from silence "whatever inferences appear proper."

This means a court can regard an accused's refusal to answer police as an indication of guilt.

King said the change will be aimed particularly at suspects who refuse to respond when arrested and then come up in court with a defense they could have put forward immediately, such as detailed alibis.

The new measure was virtually certain of passage in the 650-member Commons where Mrs. Thatcher's Conservatives have a 101-seat overall majority.

Opposition Labor Party deputy leader Roy Hattersley said the right to silence was "an essential element of a free society."

"To abolish the right to silence is to place a terrible risk against those who are verbally inadequate, those who are afraid, who simply are cautious and wish to speak to a solicitor (lawyer) before saying anything," said Hattersley.

Under a historic 1966 ruling in the case of Miranda vs. Arizona, the U.S. Supreme Court said police must tell suspects before interrogating them that they have a right to remain silent, to confer with a lawyer before answering any questions, and to have a lawyer provided if they cannot afford to hire one. The court said such warnings are needed to protect suspects' privilege against self-incrimination, assured by the U.S. Constitution's Fifth Amendment.

Like the broadcast ban, the new measure was part of a security package promised by the Thatcher government after an upsurge of killings and bombings by the IRA since this spring.

Mrs. Thatcher hinted in the Commons on Thursday that the government might soon require election candidates to swear an oath renouncing violence. "If we go ahead with that we will do it by legislation and will do it at the earliest possible opportunity," she said.

In addition, the government plans to introduce laws this winter to freeze and seize the funds of guerrilla organizations.

The latest announcements provoked fears that the Thatcher government was sacrificing democratic fundamentals in its battle against the mainly Catholic IRA's violent campaign to end British rule in Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland.

"Northern Ireland is being used as a laboratory for draconian measures to be used later in other parts of the United Kingdom," said Laborite Kevin McNamara.

The Republic of Ireland, where the IRA is also banned, already forbids broadcast interviews with members of the IRA or its legal political front, Sinn Fein, and restricts suspects' right to silence.

Sinn Fein said the latest British move brought Mrs. Thatcher's government closer to the administrations of Chile and South Africa.

Britain's human rights record in Northern Ireland has come under constant scrutiny.

In 1976, the European Commission of Human Rights ruled that interrogation techniques by Northern Ireland police then contravened stipulations against inhuman and degrading treatment and torture.

Techniques, which police say they have since abandoned, included hooding of IRA suspects under interrogation, standing them against walls and depriving them of food and sleep.

In June, Amnesty International said there were inadequate safeguards in Northern Ireland against unlawful killings by security forces.

Legal rules in Northern Ireland took a fundamental departure from the those of the rest of the United Kingdom when no-jury, one-judge courts were introduced in the province in 1973 because of the difficulty of getting frightened juries to convict or witnesses to testify at IRA trials.

Propositions '88

Initiative would give 76 justice courts elevated legal status

By Jennifer Kerr
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — The state's 76 Justice Courts, located in 33 counties, would be elevated in legal status to "courts of record" if November voters approve Proposition 91.

The proposed constitutional amendment would also require Justice Court judges to have five years of legal experience, the same as Municipal Court judges.

"Approval of Proposition 91 would provide all California residents with the same level of judicial and law enforcement services from our court system," say the backers, Assemblyman Larry Stirling, V. Gene McDonald of the California Judges Association and P. Terry Anderlini of the State Bar.

The only opponent, San Jose attorney Gary Wesley, only disputes the five years of experience requirement.

"The governor and voters should be free to make their own assessment of each candidate's qualifications without well-intentioned but misguided restrictions," Wesley wrote in his opposing ballot arguments.

The state constitution gives judicial power to the Supreme Court, courts of appeal, Superior Courts, Municipal Courts and Justice Courts. It makes all but Justice Courts "courts of record," meaning their judgments are enforceable in other states.

The constitution also requires Municipal Court judges to have five years of experience as member of the State Bar and judges for the higher courts 10 years. Justice Court judges currently are required to be attorneys and members of the State Bar.

Justice Courts are in districts with populations of less than 40,000. There are 76 in the state in 33 counties. They do the same things as Municipal Courts, handling matters such as misdemeanors and arraignments.

Proposition 91 would designate Justice Courts as "courts of record" and require judges to be members of the State Bar for five years. That requirement would not apply to judges holding office on Jan. 1, 1988.

Currently judgments from Justice courts are enforceable within California, but not in other states. That means Justice courts cannot handle interstate matters such as federal search warrants and extraditions and this presents a problem in small counties that don't have any Municipal Court.

Proposition 91 was approved by the Legislature as ACA12 by Stirling. The votes were 30-0 in the Senate and 73-0 in the Assembly.

Proposition 91:

Would require that people nominated for Justice Court judgeships be members of the State Bar and have five years experience as a judge of a court of record.

COCAINE

Cocaine is an alkaloid derivative of the coca plant, generally available in "flake" which can be 70 to 90 percent pure, and "rock", which is more common and generally 25 percent to 40 percent pure. Cocaine is often cut with other substances, such as lactose (milk sugar), manital (barley laxative), amphetamines, procaine or likocaine. Cocaine is most often "snorted." Cocaine can also be smoked through a process call free-basing. Free-basing involves smoking the "freed" cocaine precipitate from its hydrochoride salt base. Extraction techniques involve dissolving the cocaine and adding chemical catalysts-sodium hydroxide and ether or baking soda-which cause the free-base to separate. The precipitate, about half a gram from each gram of coke, is more potent after the refining process.

In initial use at moderate levels, cocaine relieves fatigue, energizes to block stress, provides a temporary feeling of self-assurance, provides an illusory sense of control over everything. These effects are attributable in part to release of brain chemicals that mimic a rush felt in accomplishment or achievement; it apears to make the accomplishment of a task easier and more obtainable.

Free-basing has a much more intense and powerful effect. Within seconds after inhaling , the user gets an orgasmic jolt that quickly subsides, often leaving an intense feeling of depression. Although the initial effects of using cocaine can be very stimulating and euphoric, often after bringing a "crash" occurs, with feelings of malaise, irritability and excessive sleepiness. This can often lead to a cycle of consuming more of the drug in order to avoid the downside effects, followed by inevitable and worsening "crashes."

The crash after free-basing is immeasurably more intense, so intense that it often leads to compulsive and prolonged use of the drug, usually until the supply runs out. Free-basers are apparenly the cocaine users likeliest to die. The high is more intense because the pure, heated cocaine vapor is absorbed into the blood steam so quickly. The speed of absorption, not the size of the dose, is the important factor in cocaine deaths. Simultaneous constriction of blood vessels and overstimulation of cardiopulmonary muscles can lead to heart attacks of lung failure as the direct cause of death.

Contrary to popular myth, cocaine is extremely addicting. Addiction is characterized by a loss of control when a user cannot curb compulsive use of the drug, even when eager to do so. Addictive behavior is indicated when the drug becomes the focal point of life: Money, career, food, sex-nothing is so important. In spite of all negative consequences, the addicted user is not dissuaded. Increasingly high dosages, and, frequently, the tendency towards free-basing and intravenous use, characterize this phase. The physical effects also are considerable. Health problems may include chronic bronchitis, hepatitis, sinusitis, tetanus, kidney damage, malnutrition, and acute hypertension. Damage to the mucous membranes, septum, eyes and brain may also develop. Psychological consequences may include depression, anxiety, suicidal tendencies and guilt.

Crack. Crack is made by heating ordinary cocaine, baking soda and water. Once dried, slabs are cracked into small rock-like pieces which can be smoked. Essentially, crack is free-basing , with someone else doing the middle, hazardous volatile step of separating the cocaine from its base. Absorbed quickly by the lungs, crack "slams" into the brain, causing an intense rush. The high lasts only 10 or 15 minutes, spurring the user to use it over and over. It is quickly addicting, leading to destructive cycles of binging, crashing and focusing more and more time, money and energy toward obtaining the next high.

MARIJUANA

Marijuana (Cannabis sativa) grows wild or is cultivated in temperate or tropical climates. The main ingredient is delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol (THC). The flowering tops and bracts contain the highest percentage of THC; leaves a lesser amount; and seeds, stems and roots, neglible quantities; Marijuana is generally smoked, though it can be orally consumed and digested.

Most reliable physiologic changes accompanying ordinary amounts of marijuana are increased heart rate and dilation of the conjunctival (inner eyelid) blood vessels. Neurophysiologic alterations include overestimation of time interval, some muscle weakness, decreased hand steadiness and impaired complex reaction time in complex situations. Effects of ordinary amounts of marijuana consist of waxing and waning feelings of relaxation, drowsiness, occasional hunger (particularly for sweets), intensified or dreamlike sensory perceptions, and a general euphoria. In large doses, illusions, hallucinations, paranoid delusions, depersonalization and confusion may occur. Adverse effects are considered infrequent with small amounts of low potency marijuana.

Problems consist of anxiety reactions, toxic psychoses, and "flashbacks". Anxiety states are seen in first or early use more often than among experienced users. Marijuana can be both physiologically and psychologically addictive. Lung damage, including increased risk of cancer to lungs and larynx, may occur from smoking and holding the smoke in for a long time.

Increased Potency. Sharply increasing potency of marijuana now available in the United States skews many of the studies from which the above information was taken. Sophisticated growing techniques have raised the average THC content to 7 percent; some strains can be as high as 14 percent THC, or 10 times stronger than once commonly used. Thus, marijuana today is essentially a different drug from that in years past. There is growing concern about physical as well as psychological effects of the stronger strains.

ALCOHOL

Alcohol, one of the most addictive and powerful drugs included in this listing, is also the only drug legally available for recreational use. In low doses, alcohol promotes feelings of relaxation, well-being and gregariousness. Some people also report that they enjoy the taste of alcohol. It is these low-dose properties that make alcohol attractive, and they account for its being considered a social "lubricant". Unfortunately we have not discovered a way to prevent the transition to the social, psychological, physiological and economic toxicity of the chronic, high dose state.

Depending upon quantity consumed, alcohol can produce a prolonged intoxicated state, causing long periods of impaired judgement, diminished control over behavior, and reduced motor skills. As a result, intoxicated people are accident-prone, not only to themselves, but also to those in their vicinity. The morning after excessive alcohol consumption many people will complain of headaches, nausea, loss of appetite, shakiness, and muddled thinking. Paradoxically, this unpleasant condition appears to deter no one from a repetition. After a prolonged binge of heavy alcohol usage, a characteristic withdrawal episode may occur. It consists of grand mal convulsions, a toxic psychosis with hallucinations, and difficult-to-control tremulousness and agitation. The withdrawal syndrome carries a definite mortality risk. This frightening condition deters hardly anyone from going on another spree. Chronic alcoholism causes brain damage that is eventually irreversible, as well as damage to the nerves, the liver, and the pancreas. It interferes with the assimilation of vitamins and other essential nutritional functions while requiring more of certain nutrients for its own metabolism. Every cell in the body is affected by these deficiencies. Resistance to infection is diminished.

Nearly all other UC campuses received a projection for some change in their enrollment capacity during the next 17 years.

Significant increases are expected at UC Irvine (11,125 more students during the next 17 years), UC San Diego (9,831), UC Davis (6,059), UC Santa Cruz (6,051) and UC Santa Barbara (2,176). UC Riverside's capacity is expected to double from 7,042 to 15,050, according to projected growth rates.

UC San Francisco will increase enrollment only slightly, and UC Berkeley's capacity is expected to decrease because of current overcrowding.

Systemwide, enrollment is expected to reach 196,950 students — an increase of 43,076 students from current enrollment figures.

"This means that the nine campuses are projected to absorb a total annual average growth of 2,534 students during the planning period, for an annual growth rate of 1.5 percent," Gardner said.

Thursday's policy meeting was not for formal decision-making. No public testimony was invited.

withdrawn.

The chairman of the British Broadcasting Corp., Marmaduke Hussey, and its director-general, Michael Checkland, said in a joint statement Wednesday night that the ban sets a damaging precedent.

Roy Hattersley, deputy leader of the socialist opposition Labor Party, said the ban was "trivial, worthless and almost certainly counterproductive."

The ban affects only British TV and radio networks. It does not affect interviews by foreign TV and radio networks broadcasting to audiences outside Britain or interviews by newspapers and other print media, either British or foreign.

The seven Irish nationalist groups covered by the ban are the Provisional and Official wings of the IRA; Sinn Fein; the Irish National Liberation Army, an outlawed splinter group from the IRA; Cumann Na Mban, the IRA's women's movement; Na Fianna Eireann, the IRA's youth section; and the Republican Socialist Group Saor Eire.

The four Protestant groups covered by the ban are the legal paramilitary Ulster Defense Association (UDA); the outlawed Ulster Freedom Fighters, who are reportedly the UDA's military arm; the outlawed Red Hand Commandos and the outlawed Ulster Volunteer Force.

David Nicholas, editor and chief executive of commercial television's Independent Television News, said he feared the ban might lead to further reporting restrictions.

plained, "I don't feel persuaded to seek three additional campuses. Why can't UC Davis and Riverside grow to the size they want to? I think we (the Regents) need to have access to a whole range of options."

Regent Yori Wada answered Martinez by saying, "I don't think a larger university is necessarily a better one." He said he is prepared to ask for the three campuses.

Regent Harold Williams asked, "Is there unused capacity existing within the UC system? It seems there is not. It is not a question of whether we need the new campuses; we need them. It may be too early, but I think it's too late."

Gardner added, "It would much easier for us if we didn't comtemplate this growth, but we feel obliged to meet our historical goal to provide access (for all eligible students) to what is doubtless the world's leading public institution. That is what driving us."

Chairman of the Regents Leo Kolligian believes, "We must accommodate the addtional students we anticipate. It is the right thing to do."

The Regents will continue discussion of UC's future throughout the next 18 months as each campus submits a Long-range Development Plan to the Office of the President.

Dukakis aide quits after Bush rumor

By William M. Welch
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A Democratic presidential campaign official resigned Thursday after a spokesman for Michael Dukakis disavowed her comment that "George Bush owes it to the American people to fess up" about a rumor that rippled through Wall Street on Wednesday.

Donna Brazile, deputy national field director, had told reporters accompanying Dukakis to New York that "the American people have every right to know" if rumors involving Bush's personal life are true.

Dukakis campaign spokesman Dayton Duncan said later, "Donna was not speaking on behalf of the campaign in any way whatsoever" and did not reflect the views of Dukakis. Shortly thereafter, Brazile said in a statement:

"Today I made certain comments which I deeply regret. I believe too strongly in the importance of electing Mike Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen to allow myself to become an issue in the campaign. Because the time is short, and the issues are so important, I have decided to leave the campaign."

Bush's spokeswoman, Sheila Tate, said, "The Bush campaign has no comment, no reaction."

The odd episode in an already negative presidential campaign unfolded as Dukakis worked to overcome a Bush advantage in pre-election polls and with Brazile expressing frustration with the tone of the Bush campaign.

Her initial remarks were made to a small group of reporters after Dukakis appearances in New Haven, Conn.

Keys instead of the islands in the Bahama. So he figured that his instruments were broken. Known for being somewhat cocky, Taylor probably ignored his compass and decided to fly North, to where he thought Florida would be, instead of staying on course."

Mosely added that two of the students were overheard on the radio saying, "If we would just fly west we would get home . . . Dammit, if we would just fly west we would get home."

The Navy investigation concluded that the crew became confused and lost, and ran out of gas. "Flight 19 made a forced landings in darkness at sea east of the peninsula of Florida . . . The state of the sea . . . was rough and unfavorable for a water landing."

Berlitz wrote that a minute inspection of 380,000 square miles revealed no life rafts, no wreckage and no oil slicks.

"Here Berlitz is counting on people on just not being able to think," Mosley commented. "How do you have a minute inspection of an area that is as large as Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona combined?"

To stimulate thought is the main objective of the organization said Seckel.

A graduate of Cornell in physics and math, Seckel took leave from Caltech where he was a doctoral candidate for both relativistic astrophysics and biochemistry in order to start the group in January of 1985. The organization is affiliated with the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal.

Both Seckel and Mosely agree that no one is out trying to destroy people's beliefs or attack their faith. What the organization does do, as stated in the group's brochure, is to put claims of fringe science, the paranormal and the occult to the tests of real science, logic, and common sense.

The Bermuda Triangle, Mosely said, is the "best example of world-wide mass deception." He added that "There is not even one theory to explain all the disappearances in the so-called Devil's Triangle. That's because the events are unrelated. It would be like trying to give a theory to explain all of the car crashes in Southern California.

"There is no evidence that unexplained losses of ships and planes are greater in the Triangle than anywhere else in the world. Yet the hoax lives on."

Mosely said that people have a habit of believing in that which comforts them — that which provides an explanation for the unknown — even in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

"Hoaxes" such as the Bermuda Triangle are also perpetuated through the media, Mosely said. He explained that "Sensational claims get attention and they sell. There is little critical review, and if the claims turn out to be false, there is no follow-up story because that's not news anymore."

This is how, according to Mosely, people "get away with" spreading half-truths, leaving out information, providing only superficial research, ignoring new discoveries and not backing up their statements with evidence.

It is the duty of scientists and other skeptics to inform the public with reliable scientific and factual information and "not become a U.S. senator but lost in the primary.

In 1987, Paul resigned from the Republican Party. In a letter to the party chairman, he wrote that he wanted to "disassociate" himself from a party that contributed to "unprecedented deficits, massive monetary inflation, indiscriminate military spending . . . unconstitutional foreign policy (and) attack on . . . personal liberties and privacy."

An advocate of civil liberties, Paul embodies several of these elements in his platform, including a strong national defense, a return to a gold standard and the abolishment of the income tax.

When asked about the income tax, Paul recalled the violence toward British taxation of the colonies. "Remember the Boston Tea Party?"

He believes the tax "destroys productivity" by decreasing work incentive and leads to corruption in the form of tax evasion. It should be abolished, because "so many people think it is a dumb system," he says.

The income tax is an infringement on civil liberties, according to Paul. He believes that citizens' liberties are being attacked "as never before" and wishes to see responsibility placed on individuals, rather than on the government, as long as they do not hurt each other.

"We want to legalize the freedom of choice in what people read, believe and what they take in their bodies," he says.

Another item on Paul's agenda is to "bring the boys home" by withdrawing all military and economic support to U.S. allies and enemies.

Libertarians, according to Paul, believe it is morally wrong to conduct foreign wars. In addition, he said the Constitution does not "authorize the placement of troops around the world."

"Military purposes never achieve anything," he says, citing the U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War.

Claiming that the annual debt is $238 billion, Paul also says the United States cannot afford to support other nations. He continued to maintain that "the role of government is to protect America and our liberties."

Enemies that attack the United States would attack with missiles, Paul says. "We have to take a look at the Strategic Defense Initiative . . . We have to live in a modern age — defense through SDI, nuclear submarines and modern technology."

And finally, Paul wants the United States to return to a gold standard and abolish the Federal Reserve. Politicians, he declares, print "counterfeit money."

have the field open to deceivers," Mosley said.

One thing that a true skeptic keeps in mind is to question — even the logical. "As scientists and skeptics we have the responsibility to keep an open mind," Mosely continued. "Some claims may be true. After all, in the 1800s the idea of meteorites was poo-poohed."

put my finger on some definite signs, but I can just say, seeing other areas of the world that tensions have lessened, if there's a possibility of that, yes, that should happen."

Asked whether he saw a greater prospect of this than when he took office eight years ago, Reagan said, "There have been a great many changes over eight years, and I think it's possible to see some things that we couldn't foresee then."

He said the U.S. role in relations between South and North Korea "is to be of any help we can."

Tensions on the Korean peninsula have been almost constant for more than 30 years, and Roh seeks accommodation with his country's communist-ruled neighbor to the North.

Roh proposed a summit meeting between the two Koreas in a speech Tuesday at the United Nations General Assembly. He called for both countries to meet with the United States, the Soviet Union, China and Japan to lay the groundwork for an era of peace and prosperity in northeast Asia.

The State Department welcomed Roh's "imaginative and constructive policy of reconciliation and accommodation."

On Wednesday, North Korea's deputy foreign minister, Kang Sok Ju, spoke to the General Assembly and proposed creating a new nation out of North and South Korea with a shared military command and a National Assembly with equal representation from both sides.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said Wednesday the administration has no plans to remove North Korea from the list of countries that U.S. officials say engage in international terrorism.

He added that "North Korea's well-established track record of belligerence and state terror makes a very cautious approach to this issue necessary."

But Redman reaffirmed that the United States is reviewing its policy toward North Korea following the resumption of talks between the two Koreas at Panmunjom, and the show of North Korean restraint during the Seoul Olympics last month.

There had been concern that North Korea would attempt to disrupt the Olympics.

A State Department official who briefed reporters on Tuesday on condition of anonymity said the administration "will probably have an announcement" on policy changes toward North Korea in a few days.

come to UCLA, Walter advises. "The least of importance is that we have all the connections (but) that's useless if the material is not good," he says.

And while UCLA accepts applicants for film and television possessing diverse backgrounds, Walter says they have to "demonstrate palpable and substantial talent in writing."

Inflation

Prices are rising because some of the state enterprises suddenly ordered to make a profit have simply substituted expensive products for cheap ones, Belov said.

Economic reform has also brought 1 million layoffs in the first nine months of 1988, although he insisted all of those who lost their jobs received new ones or were retired on pension. The government says it does not permit unemployment.

Cooperatives were the lone item of unqualified success in the reform that some Western economists have predicted will bring the problems of capitalism long before bringing its benefits.

The private co-ops, where wages consist of shared profits, have created 700,000 new jobs in the 18 months since they were legalized, the figures showed. Individuals encouraged by Gorbachev's call for private operators to offer services the state has failed to provide have established thousands of enterprises, ranging from specialty restaurants to pay toilets to computer consulting.

But in the critical area of food supplies, Belov acknowledged the Soviet Union is still a long way from being able to feed its people without substantial imports.

Supplies actually reaching the stores, the most significant figure in a nation where vast amounts of food rot in the field or on the road to market, are rising but are still $2 billion short of the need and the state plan for the year, Belov said.

Seals

For distinguished functions

Assembly organizers were informed of the burglary Thursday. Tati Wennekamp, a member of the chancellor's committee on public ceremonies, was disappointed but not dismayed.

"It's terribly unfortunate," Wennekamp said. "But I don't think it will significantly affect the chancellor's presentation."

Still, Wennekamp had previously requested the seal to grace the chancellor's lectern.

While in service at UCLA, the seals were used at formal functions, commencements and meetings of the UC Regents.

"It has to be an event with distinguished character," said Klain.

The seals are 18 inches in diameter and have raised letters and emblems. Two of the seals, worth $500 each, are plastic and painted in blue and gold. The other seal, worth $1000, is cast in aluminum with a metallic finish, said Jerry Kurtz, a CASO senior events manager.

Room usually locked

The seals were stolen sometime between Oct 3., when they were last used, and Oct. 12, when CASO first discovered they were missing from a storage room in Royce Hall.

Kurtz discovered the burglary last week and reported it to campus police Monday.

According to UCPD reports, suspects allegedly entered the locked room, took the seals and left undetected. Police do not know how the burglars entered the room, and saw no sign of forced entry, according to reports.

Kurtz told police that the door to the storage room is usually locked, but sometimes it does not completely close.

Don't worry; we're not laughing

The "decoration" of winnebagos by UCLA fraternities — a recent staple of road trips to UCLA football games to UC Berkeley and Stanford — has been sexist, misogynist, crude and inexcusable.

The slogans painted on the fraternity vans before UCLA's away game against Cal were no exception.

English is a rich and expressive language, but the Bruin was sad to note that, of all the things the Greeks could have written to represent themselves, they chose slogans such as "pussy magnet," "show UCLA your tits" and "don't laugh; your daughter is inside."

Alarmingly, violence against women was advocated on these "bagos." Fraternity members might say that a slogan like "rape and pillage" was not intended this way. However, the UCLA community, cannot and should not be expected to make such an interpretation.

Fraternity leaders often bemoan their poor relations with the campus community at large. But such calls for a more "neighborly" attitude between Greeks and non-Greeks ring hollow in the face of such blatant sexism. UCLA students have a right to expect better from a group that, through direct affiliation, represents their campus.

So when students complain about the behavior of UCLA fraternities prior to the Cal game, it's worthwhile to remember that these students aren't just expressing negative stereotypes about the nature of the Greek system. The winnebago slogans served as a crude reminder that the Greek system is not above criticism. And if the fraternities are harshly berated over this issue, then, quite simply, they brought it upon themselves.

The grape boycott is a source of dignity for the Chicano community

By Juan Diego Montemayor

It is encouraging to see viewpoint articles on the United Farmworker Grape Boycott issue. It is a reflection of the growing awareness and sense of justice that a majority of students on this campus share, in spite of the extreme ignorance and prejudice of a very few.

The United Farmworkers Union (UFW) has been boycotting table grapes for over four years in an effort to force the growers to the negotiating table. The main issues include basic working conditions, wages, and health and safety standards for the workers and the public, e.g. a ban on dangerous pesticides.

Most students can immediately see the unfair relationship between politically powerful agribusiness and the farmworkers. Agribusiness' profit margin in California alone is over $20 billion yearly; the farmworkers are receiving minimum wage or less and are the most exploited and least appreciated sector of the working class. To a few students, including Jeff Patterson (whose viewpoint article appeared in the Bruin, October 15), the boycott of grapes and the general struggle of farmworkers is radical and outside the realm of justice.

What is so extreme and radical about the cause of the UFW? The cause of the UFW is extreme to some because it is not just another struggle of workers asking for higher wages and better working conditions. The majority of farmworkers are Chicanos/Mexicanos, and the struggle of the UFW has been a source of political empowerment, respect and dignity for our community.

The fight of the UFW is neither radical nor extreme. It is a struggle of one of the most oppressed sectors of the working class against the richest group of ranchers in the world.

According to Patterson, Mexicanos/Chicanos should be happy with what they get, no matter how menial, degrading or dangerous, because conditions are worse in their Third World homeland. We've heard it before: "If you don't like it here in the United States, go back to where you belong." I would like to remind Patterson that we are where we belong. Mexicanos/Chicanos are not going anywhere else, and, by the year 2040, we will be the majority in California.

As a Chicano/Mexicano I'm proud to express my solidarity with the UFW by boycotting grapes. Throughout my life the farmworkers' struggle has given me a sense of dignity and self-respect. The majority of Latino students here at UCLA, including myself, can trace their roots to farm labor. We know firsthand what it means to work 14 hours a day with back hunched over, 6 or 7 days a week, with no sanitation facilities, for minimum wage with no benefits.

The fight of the UFW is neither radical nor extreme. It is a struggle of one of the most oppressed sectors of the working class against the richest group of ranchers in the world. It is a courageous and inspiring struggle. It is part of the overall struggle of the Chicano/Mexicano people seeking justice and self-determination, and it is part of the overall struggle of all justice-loving people. Their victory is our victory.

You're sitting there, reading Bruin Viewpoint, when all of a sudden you find yourself saying, "Who wrote this?"

Well, for the most part, it's UCLA students themselves whose articles fill our pages.

Kind of makes you proud to be a Bruin, doesn't it? Or perhaps it makes you consider a transfer a little more seriously.

Whatever the case, there's no need to feel left out. All you have to do is write us a legible letter — being sure to include your name, year, major and a phone number (or, for non-students, your name, city of residence and phone number) — and you too may find your writing on the pages of Bruin Viewpoint.

Reagan's INF Treaty is nothing to be proud of

By Jim Swarzman

Recently attention has been refocused by George Bush on the intermediate nuclear arms agreements (INF Treaty) that was reached with the Soviets earlier this year. The agreement is being hailed as one of the major achievements of the Reagan administration. Without a doubt, reaching an intermediate arms agreement with the Soviet Union is of major significance. But the effect of this agreement is not a favorable one for the United States. The reasons are as follows.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in large part depends on their nuclear deterrent to hold the superior Warsaw Pact forces at bay in central Europe. Both tactical nuclear weapons and intermediate-range nuclear weapons played a major role in this deterrence. The United States deployed intermediate-range nuclear missiles in central Europe at the request of the governments of the central European NATO countries, especially the government of the Federal Republic of Germany. The West Germans were and are face-to-face with Warsaw Pact conventional forces that far outweigh their NATO counterparts — hence the need for NATO to have a credible nuclear deterrent and to pledge to use it in response to Warsaw Pact aggression. By answering West Germany's request for intermediate-range nuclear missiles, the United States filled this need and also created a linkage between the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany. By agreeing to remove its intermediate-range nuclear weapons from central, Europe the United States has destroyed this linkage with the West Germans.

The West Germans now face the spectre of overwhelmingly superior Warsaw Pact forces invading West Germany, with NATO's only possible nuclear response being the use of tactical nuclear weapons, which would be used almost exclusively on West German soil.

The West Germans now face the spectre of overwhelmingly superior Warsaw Pact forces invading West Germany, with NATO's only possible nuclear response being the use of tactical nuclear weapons, which would be used almost exclusively on West German soil. As a result of being faced with this possibility, the West Germans are bound to be much more conciliatory in their relations with the Soviet bloc. This is clearly not in the best interest of the United States.

The intermediate arms agreement, therefore, has not reduced the risk of war in central Europe with its accompanying risk of nuclear war. Instead, the risk of war has actually been increased. This is because, without inclusion of a reduction of Warsaw Pact conventional forces, the INF Treaty is actually destabilizing in its effect, since NATO's nuclear deterrent is now less credible. Warsaw Pact conventional forces still far outnumber those of NATO.

How did this happen? Apparently Mikhail Gorbachev "snookered" the Reagan administration. When Reagan proposed eliminating intermediate range nuclear weapons, he was sure that the Soviets would not agree, since they had always been vehemently opposed to on-site inspection. Well, Gorbachev called Reagan's bluff, agreed to on-site inspection, and Reagan had no choice but to accept or be branded the man who would not agree to nuclear arms reductions. If this agreement leads to other agreements on the reduction of inter-continental ballistic missiles (ICBM's), submarine launched nuclear missiles, and/or conventional forces then it can be viewed as a success. Otherwise, the fact of the matter is that the elimination of intermediate-range nuclear weapons in central Europe can only be viewed as a success for the Soviets.

Swarzman is a senior majoring in geography.

How do they get women to sit in the winnebagos?

By Elena Heckathorne

I must admit, I was a little surprised at myself. There I stood on the street corner, watching the fraternity "bagos" go cruising by splattered with day-glo misogynist nonsense, proudly attesting to the frat boys' primal urges, grunting to the world, "Me UCLA frat boy. Want fuck woman. Ook ook." I was kind of offended, sure. What life form above the level of an amoeba wouldn't be? But after four years of the perennial frat boy winnebago extravaganza, well, you tend to get a little jaded. It's hard to get too excited — the boys on the row are just flying their true colors again, letting everyone know from L.A. to Berkeley and everywhere in between that UCLA is home not only to championship athletics and world-renowned research but also ignorant sexist elitist cretins called frat boys.

But then, that's yesterday's potatoes, isn't it? We already knew that. In fact, what I found really disturbing was that despite their clearly professed, literally spelled out attitude toward women, they seemed to have no trouble finding girls to hop right into their rolling pigsties. I found this truly amazing. It's one thing to be part of a system in which sexism and objectification of women is rampant but somewhat implicit, but what could ever possess a woman to step inside an RV emblazoned with the message "Show UCLA Your Tits" or "Pussy Magnet" or "I Want to Shoot My Load" or "Hungry for Head"? Is it possible that someone's sense of self-respect could be so battered that she would willingly subject herself to this gorilla cage? Could her sense of belonging be so ruptured that the only way she feels secure and accepted is to consent to this psychological gang rape?

I found this profoundly disturbing, but, of course, this being a free country (for rich white kids, anyway), the frat boys and their little sisters have every right to continue abasing themselves and each other in this manner to their hearts' content. But as long as this sort of behavior is the accepted norm, the fraternities stand as a permanent institutionalized insult to all women, and their little sisters stand in mute passive acceptance of this insult.

Heckathorne is a senior majoring in physics.

Do we have to change the name of Bruin Walk?

Editor:

As I walk down Bruin Walk on my way to class I am all of a sudden startled by a large blur humming past me at great velocity with only inches to spare. An instant later I realized that I just had a close encounter with a bicyclist.

Each time this happens I wonder about the student who zooms down from the dorms, swerving in and out between students as though he were riding down an unpredictable slalom course. Is this two-wheeled speed demon aware of the fact that riding his bike on Bruin Walk is prohibited? Is he aware of the fact that there are signs up and down Bruin Walk stating this? Could it be that he cannot read? If so then what is he doing here in the first place?

I remember that, when I was in elementary school, everyone was taught that a bicycle was like any other vehicle and was not to be ridden on the sidewalk. Perhaps the rider forgot that or maybe he was absent that day. The point is that this student and many others like him are potentially dangerous to those of us who walk to class.

Q: "What about the UCPD?"

A: I have seen the UCPD be more lenient with these individuals than the CHP is with someone doing 60 in a 55 zone. In all my time here I have seen countless warnings given and only one citation. On the other hand, I have also seen at least three collisions and countless close calls. Besides, the UCPD on Bruin Walk are on foot, which makes it difficult for them to chase bicyclists.

Of course, we could always change Bruin Walk to "Bruin Ride" and have the UCPD give tickets to the pedestrians; after all, they are easier to catch.

Forest Whitaker in a rare quiet moment as Charlie Parker in 'Bird'

Passion defies the odds in 'Bird'

By Gregory Keer
Contributor

■ FILM: *Bird. Director/Producer Clint Eastwood. Written by Joel Oliansky. With Forest Whitaker, Diane Venora, and Sam E. Wright. A Malpaso production released by Warner Bros. Pictures.

So they made another movie about a jazz musician. But most Americans don't like jazz, do they? It's supposed to have a real heavy story line. Few people enjoy depressing stories, right? Clint Eastwood produced and directed it. You mean 'Dirty Harry?' He's got a reputation for being tough, not sensitive. Besides, he's a country music junkie, isn't he?

During the late-1930s, alto saxophonist Charlie 'Yardbird' Parker introduced bebop into an unwelcoming world where jazz was primarily associated with dance halls. Holding true to his radical but deeply personal ambition, Parker's spontaneous and inventive approach to the music set jazz on a new course of modernity and artistry by the early-40s. Clint Eastwood has had to face similar doubts about the potential acceptance of his new film Bird. Yet, it currently illuminates silver screens across the nation with the passion of Parker himself.

Eastwood grew up in the Bay Area during the rise of bebop. One night he saw Bird play at a 'Jazz At The Philharmonic' concert in San Francisco and the impression of the man who is considered to be jazz's greatest improviser was indelible.

In Bird, the director is so tuned in to the essence of Parker's music that the very style of his filmmaking moves to a bebop rhythm — going back and forth through flashbacks that harmonize with a plot that runs pell-mell into the maelstrom of the musician's burning feelings and fatalistic path.

Eastwood's commitment to jazz (he's also an accomplished jazz pianist) reveals itself in the way he saturates Bird with the music. In past jazz movies, even Bertrand Tavernier's excellent 'Round Midnight,' jazz takes a back seat to the depiction of the characters. But bebop was Charlie Parker's character. Eastwood understands this and frequently shows Bird (played by Forest Whitaker) performing.

Parker's music permeates this film in such a way that even when it isn't playing one gets the subconscious sense that it never stops. Music supervisor Lennie Niehaus — who has scored several Eastwood projects — mixed Parker's original solos in with newly recorded tracks by '80s musicians, bringing the songs up to contemporary technical standards. Niehaus, himself an altoist, fills in on several Bird tunes only when the '40s and '50s recordings couldn't be salvaged. The overall effect is a musical vitality that helps bring Parker's persona to life.

In a fashion that makes Bird an extremely effective human drama and not just a tale about playing jazz, screenwriter Joel Oliansky centers the story around Parker's final ten years of life, focusing on his involvement with a white dancer named Chan Richardson (Diane Venora). Their love for one another transcended much of the adversity of their time; racial prejudice, the death of one of their three children, and the fact that they were never formally married though common law made them husband and wife. Eastwood allows the intensity of

Sue Coe's searing, confrontational art

Activist's works featured in 'AGIT/POP' exhibit

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

SUE COE's art is an assault on apathy. Would anyone else do a series on the infamous New Bedford gang rape? Or give a lecture on the dangers of biotechnology punctuated with scenes sketched inside slaughterhouses?

"Time magazine called me," said Coe at her recent lecture at the Otis/Parsons Art Gallery (accompanying AGIT/POP, an exhibit on activist art). "They said, 'We want something on AIDS but don't make it depressing.'"

The audience laughed, both at Time's idiotic request, and knowing that Coe is certainly not one to whitewash volatile subjects.

Indeed, she proceeded to create a magnificent indictment of the Reagan Administration's neglect of AIDS patients: an apocalyptic fire sweeping over Capitol Hill provides a backdrop, while a young black man, dying of AIDS, sprawls across the foreground.

Not surprisingly, Time rejected Coe's work.

Commissioned by another major magazine to do a work on the New Bedford rape, Coe created a gruesome picture of men lining up to rape a traumatized and screaming woman. Her work was published, but the confrontational image of the crime itself was excised, leaving only the background of voyeuristic accomplices, not the victim or the rapists.

"This is a warning (to anyone who wants to do political art)," Coe told her audience. "This is what they'll do to your work."

Coe's art is a weapon with a wide range of targets. Attacking sexism, racism, commercialism, politicians (Pinochet, Reagan, Thatcher and Botha among them), it is work that is not always palatable to an often staid art world.

England is a Bitch depicts white policemen attacking interracial demonstrators while Prince Charles and Lady Diana are lampooned in cutting caricatures along the work's borders. Meat and Pork for Your Fork, part of a series on slaughterhouses and bioengineering, is Coe's attack on the conditions in which pigs and other animals are bred for consumption. Woman Tied to a Pole (which appears in the Otis show) shows an emaciated, starving black woman with a child clutching at her tattered clothes, as a white soldier approaches her menacingly, unzipping his pants.

Coe's hardline means that besides rankling a magazine or two, she has faced censorship; her rape paintings were banned in her native England. But, likethe women who angrily protested that ban, Coe herself has succeeded in finding a safe forum for her work. Circumventing gallery politicking, she has completed several books including X, chronicling the life of Malcolm X, and How to Commit Suicide in South Africa — a powerful critique of South African apartheid and American complicity whose title alludes to the "suicides" of political detainees, such as Steve Biko.

Although many of the other works which appear alongside Coe's at the Otis/Parsons Gallery's AGIT/POP exhibit also have social issues as their focus, they seem diluted and tame in comparison. Sue Coe is an artist who tackles the difficult moral issues of today's world — by confronting taboos and never fearing controversy.

AGIT/POP: The Otis/Parsons Gallery's AGIT/POP exhibit continues through Oct. 22, 1988. 16 panels of Barbara Carrasco's censored mural L.A. History — A Mexican Perspective, which have never been exhibited in Los Angeles, are included. Works by AGIT/POP curator Robbie Conal, whose "guerilla postering" has made his incisive portraits/caricatures known on bus stops and gallery walls alike, are also featured. Other artists include Leon Golub, Jerry Kearns, and Rothenberg. The Gallery is located at 2401 Wilshire Blvd., L.A. Call (213) 251-0555 for further information.

Grecian Odyssey, the second film in this season's Armchair Adventures travel film series, will be screened at Wadsworth Theater tonight. The picture will be presented by Clint Denn, the director and photographer. He will also serve as narrator. Denn will take the viewer from Athens, the capital, to such storied locations as the Temple of Poseidon and Delphic City. Other venues in the travelogue are the Corinth Canal and Olympia, first site of the Olympic Games. Some photography was done aboard the M.S. Oceanus, on its cruise itinerary to Mykonos, Crete, and Rhodes. The film is highlighted by some breathtaking underwater cinematography, done by Denn himself. An expert scuba diver, he learned the sport from the famous diver John Craig years ago. Grecian Odyssey will begin at 8 p.m. Student discount tickets are available, with ID, for $3.25 — half the normal admission price. — J.D. 'Bird'

Parker and Chan emotions to boldly come through and, in so doing, helps us to see part of what kept a self-destructive man creating music.

The film unflinchingly deals with the vices of Charlie Parker as honestly as it celebrates his virtues. Bird was a womanizer (Chan was his fourth wife), an excessive drinker, and a heroin addict. He was given to periods of deep depression — in one wrenching scene Parker, stricken with grief over his daughter's death, tries to commit suicide by swallowing iodine — and he spent time in mental health institutions at least twice. Parker died of a heart seizure, his body ravaged by substance abuse at the age of 34 in 1955. Bird exhibits Parker in his oft-intoxicated state in an effort to show the tragic side of his extremist personality.

Forest Whitaker, who has already won a much-deserved Golden Palm award for Bird at the Cannes Film Festival last spring, scores the year's finest performance. Previously, the twenty-seven year old actor was best known for his role opposite Robin Williams in Good Morning Viet Nam.

In his first lead role, Whitaker, who resembles Bird's husky stature, aptly plays Parker as a mountain of spontaneously combustible emotion set off by an uncanny intellect and rationality that comprehended the world all too well. As Eastwood has said before in previous articles, the actor's training in music (he studied opera at USC) and his hours spent learning to finger-sync the saxophonist's note-playing helped him embody Parker's musical soul.

Whitaker's supporting cast is made up of little known but highly talented actors. Diane Venora (Cotton Club, Ironweed) spent time with Chan Parker before and during filming to facilitate a richly layered interpretation of her character.

Sam E. Wright, an acclaimed stage performer, plays Bird's best friend and frequent co-worker trumpeter John 'Dizzy' Gillespie. Wright delivers the now-famous line that Diz spoke to Parker when the two were touring the West Coast, "Yard, they're gonna talk about you when you're dead." Michael Zelniker also had the good fortune of consulting Red Rodney, the Jewish trumpeter in Parker's all-black quintet that toured the deep South in the early-'50s, regarding his role. Zelniker supplies much of the comic relief in this otherwise dark tale, and touchingly shows the idolizing view Rodney (and countless other musicians) had of Parker.

Obsessed with detail and effect, Eastwood presents the settings of the '40s and '50s with exquisite accuracy. Cinematographer Jack Green and set designer Edward Carfagno re-create the closeness and smokey ambience of night clubs on a New York City's 52nd St. aglow with neon lights.

Bird is a film of incredible honesty — the kind of honesty that made Charlie Parker's music and persona speak directly to the souls of jazz lovers through the years. Eastwood's imaginative telling of Bird's story possesses such immense passion that you really feel the power of emotions stripped bare. Ultimately, Bird is a dramatic experience that moves, and shakes, and defies the cynics in proving that a man like Charlie Parker ever existed.

ASTRO•GRAPH

Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

Oct. 21, 1988

More opportunities than usual should be in the offing to strengthen your financial position in the year ahead. Your prospects look better than they have in years.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) A trend is beginning to develop that will have a favorable influence on your earning potential. It will not be a cycle of short duration. Get a jump on life by understanding the influences that are governing you in the year ahead. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today by mailing $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Take a chance on your own ideas today before you look to others. What you conceive is likely to have far greater potential for success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Let your natural sense of timing come into play today if you're trying to finalize an important matter. Press for the close when your intuition directs.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Don't be reluctant to ask probing questions today regarding something new you are undertaking but don't fully comprehend. The information is available.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) There are two promising areas at present that could be meaningful financially. One is your regular work, the other is a confidential channel.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This is the kind of day you'll like, because you should be able to do things your own way. If you don't run the show, you'll have only yourself to blame.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Don't be impatient, even if you feel blocked. Surprising things could develop behind the scenes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) In involvements with friends where important issues are concerned, things should work out in ways that will make everyone happy. Do your part.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Even though a goal you'll be striving towards today will be personal, you might be surprised how much support you get from others.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) In partnership arrangements today, it should be you rather than your associate, who plays the major role. Assert yourself, don't wait upon this person to make the first move.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You may not be in a position to influence changes today, but you will be able to make the most of any shifts that occur. The benefits could be considerable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Conditions are quite favorable today for striking bargains or making deals. Try to do so now, because later influences may be less conducive.

Ice hockey team starts the season

By Nancy Stewart
Staff Writer

With three solid weeks of practice under its belt, the UCLA ice hockey team is ready to cut the ice and begin league play, taking on the CSUN Matadors and Arizona State this weekend.

The club has a reputation to uphold from last year, as it entered playoff competition with a mediocre 7-13 record and battled all the way to the championships.

"I'd rather be in a position to dominate in the league, instead of trying to catch people," head coach Jack White said in reference to last season's struggle.

CSUN and ASU are both expected to be tough matches, as the Bruins lost to both teams last season. Northridge is lacking two key players from the previous squad but has the "Scotts" returning: Scott Humphreys and Scott Christlied. Both players will try to balance the team scoring effort this year, replacing last year's high individual scoring drives.

Attempting to stop Bruin pucks are goalies Jeff Lux and Rob Clark, consistently two of the league's best.

Arizona State is also a contender on the ice but, interestingly, not in the league. Last year, the Sun Devils were disqualified from league play after using ineligible players on their team. The lack of a travel budget has also prevented the club from entering a league this year.

"I feel the team is ready for Arizona State. The nucleus is there, and I'm comfortable with the direction the club is going," Coach White said.

The Bruins will have a hard defensive line in Marty Bennett, Bob Ringo and newcomer Eric Hithe, whom the coach calls "a real addition to the team."

Game time against Northridge is 2:15 p.m. today at the Culver City Ice Arena.

Women's soccer kicks off with 'SC

Bruins No. 1 in tourney for sixth straight year

By Wendy Witherspoon,
Staff Writer

With the first round of games in the Women's Collegiate Soccer Conference Tournament officially finished, the UCLA Bruins have claimed the No. 1 spot for the sixth consecutive year.

This weekend, the Bruins will face USC, a squad that they've already handled in the tournament, with hopes of maintaining their undefeated record.

In first-round action, the Bruins battled arch-rival USC under the lights on Trojan territory. UCLA blasted Troy, 3-0, and is looking for more.

"We're just going to go on the field and go about our business," said coach Afshin Ghotbi about what should prove to be a very physical game.

Although the Bruins will be designated as the home team, the battle will be held away from the UCLA campus to raise funds for the UCLA women's soccer organization. Ghotbi said that he is also trying to promote women's soccer in the area and that several young American Youth Soccer Organization girls' teams will display their skills before the game and at halftime.

The game will be held at the California State University, Los Angeles stadium at 7:30 p.m. Saturday evening. Tickets will be sold at the gate and will be $3 for adults, $1 for UCLA students and $1 for children.

FOOTBALL: Bruins play first game as nation's No. 1 team in rushing defense, allowing only 106.8 yards per game. The play down in the trenches by both the offensive and defensive lines will be crucial for both teams.

However, his own offense is the least of Tomey's worries. Terry Donahue has one of the nation's finest, led by Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week Troy Aikman and a bevy of talented running backs, including senior Eric Ball, sophomore Brian Brown and freshman Shawn Wills. "UCLA has more quality running backs than anyone in the country," Tomey said.

Aikman, who can't be ignored when looking at the Bruin offense, has had an outstanding year. Not only has he thrown for 1425 yards and 17 touchdowns, but he also has more yards rushing than vaunted scrambler Rodney Peete, 38 yards to 13.

"You can't really stop a player like Aikman," Tomey lamented. "All you can do is try to contain him. He does a good job getting rid of the ball, so pressure is not the answer.

"You just have to try and win in another area. He made some unbelievable throws against us last year," Tomey continued. "Troy's the key. He's so experienced and mature and so well coached."

Aikman completed 19 of 25 passes for 356 yards and three touchdowns against the 'Cats last year in the Rose Bowl. If the Arizona defense can't keep a lid on Aikman and his surprisingly good receiving corps of Mike Farr, Reggie Moore and David Keating, the Wildcat faithful may be leaving early.

The Arizona defense is tied for fourth in the conference with the Bruins in passing defense, and is only sixth in rushing defense. Overall, the 'Cats are yielding over 352 yards a game. If the Wildcats want the upset, the defense will be the key.

Arizona is looking down the barrel of a loaded gun, as UCLA is averaging 494 yards per game. The 'Cats are coming off a big 45-28 win against Washington State, the nation's top team on offense. The Wildcats held the WSU offense to its lowest scoring output of the season.

Leading the Wildcat defense will be Pac-10 Defensive Player of the Week Brad Henke. The defensive tackle had nine tackles, three quarterback sacks, one fumble recovery and one fumble caused. Along with nose guard Dana Wells, an All-Conference selection last year, Henke and Co. will try to make things tough on the Bruin backfield.

The other Wildcat strength is the kicking game. Doug Platt connected on all three of his field goals, from 27, 44 and 43 yards, and was 4-4 on PATs. Tomey has said that his kicking game must be a factor on Saturday, so look for Platt teeing up. If Platt doesn't, that probably bodes well for the Bruins.

One thing is for sure Saturday: The Wildcats will have to be on top of their game, both offensively and defensively, if they are to have a chance to knock off college football's current "top dawgs."

Volleyball

comes in aggression. When playing teams that they are heavily favored to beat, the Bruins tend to relax their game too much.

Winning the big, high-pressure match has been cake for UCLA. When fired up, the Bruins can practically beat anybody. Victories over the defending national champions Hawaii and the preseason top-ranked Illinois team proved that.

Ultimately, the task of motivation must fall on the shoulders of the only senior, Boyer, as well as veterans Tomkus and Crocker. With these players' leadership, UCLA will be able to avoid the upset.

Nevertheless, the team deserves much credit. It has now won 17 consecutive matches and remains unbeaten in the Pac-10. Sustaining its level of play is the next hurdle for UCLA.

Harriers at Pomona

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

While the cream of UCLA's cross country teams is in training for the Pac-10 Championships on Oct. 31, there is still one more regular season race to be run. Tomorrow, most of the men's and women's non-varsity will compete in the Cal Poly Pomona Invitational.

According to women's head coach Bob Messina, it's a chance for the Bruins' non-scoring runners to "go out in style." Most of the top harriers on both squads are training through this meet, getting primed for the Pac-10s in Palo Alto next Monday.

For the women tomorrow, three seniors will run the Bonelli Park course, in what could be their last collegiate race. C'za Azcueta, Nancy Brown—still coming back from Achilles tendon surgery—and Jena Haggenmiller will compete in the 5000-meter event.

Head men's coach Bob Larsen hopes that his runners "will have an opportunity to be a little bit more experienced" after this meet.

For seniors Sergio O'Cadiz and Mike Wangler, however, it will probably be their last chance to run in blue and gold.

Also competing in the 8000-meter race for the men are junior Christian Cushing-Murray, sophomore Bill Meyer and freshmen Steve Huang, Luigi Gratton, Shawn Noonan and Jeff Wood.

1988 UCLA MET—LIFE SOCCER CLASSIC

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

If there is anything close to a dark-horse entry in this weekend's tournament, then the Naval Academy squad fits the bill most appropriately.

Navy has a fine overall record of 6-1-3 in this year's campaign, but the Midshipmen remain unranked nationally and somewhat of an unknown commodity.

"They have upset some good teams, but we haven't scouted them," said UCLA head coach Sigi Schmid. "I imagine that they are fit—all service teams tend to be fit—and they are probably more team-oriented than individual."

A look at the Navy stat sheet proves Schmid quite correct on several counts. The Midshipmen are a balanced scoring team, with 11 players accounting for the team's 17 total goals this season, Even goalkeeper Mike Ulses has assisted on one goal.

Sean Heritage and Lon Schager are the top scorers, with three goals apiece, while Hal Zabrowski and Jim Mulik share the top assist honors, with three each. The Midshipmen's physical stamina is borne out by their scoring 11 of those 17 goals in the second half.

The search for a star player on the Navy roster most likely stops at Ulses, who compiled a meager 0.71 goals against average this season. Ulses is a major reason why the Midshipmen are 4-1-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association, with five shutouts to his name.

In fact, Ulses has received the CAA Co-Player of the Week two times this season, the latest for his two shutouts last week. Navy beat nationally-ranked George Mason, 1-0, and tied West Chester, 0-0, in the last two games.

Navy comes to Los Angeles looking for national acclaim, but Coach Greg Meyers is no stranger to the collegiate soccer scene. Meyers, in his 13th season at Annapolis, needs but one more victory for career number 200. Therefore, Sunday's game between SDSU and Navy could be historic, in a sense, if the Aztecs win and the Midshipmen lose on Saturday, for Meyer would be looking for his 200th, while Chuck Clegg of SDSU would be fighting for his 100th collegiate win.

Last season, the San Diego State Aztecs split two games in the Met Life Classic but, at season's end, were runner-up to Clemson and the NCAA title. Forced to play their entire playoff schedule on the road, the Aztecs were 1987's Cinderella story in soccer cleats.

Such is the magic of the Met Life Classic, for a participant in each of the three previous tournaments has made it to the NCAA finals.

A potent offense mixed with a stingy defense has Coach Chuck Clegg's 1988 team ranked No. 6 in the nation, and second in the Far West Region.

The experience and youth of the Aztecs have blended quite well with the three forwards, where junior Kyle Whittemore (5 goals, 4 assists) and sophomore Eric Wynalda (11g, 3a) have been complemented by freshman Jeff Betts (8g, 3a).

"Not only has he (Betts) scored eight goals, but he has taken the pressure off of the other two and given us three legitimate scoring threats," said Clegg.

"Our style is to build out from the back, be very patient, and look for the right opportunity," added Clegg.

Since the Aztecs are 12-2-1, there obviously have been many such opportunities. However, those opportunities are not so common for SDSU's opponents. The Aztec defense has allowed a paltry 7 goals, with Bryan Finnerty manning the nets with a 0.58 goals against average, including 5½ shutouts.

The most noted man in front of Finnerty is Marcelo Balboa, a National Team player who is also the fourth leading scorer for the Aztecs.

By playing South Carolina out of the Southern Region and Navy out of the Mid-Atlantic, Clegg feels that this tournament has playoff implications.

"It helps a great deal, in that the at-large berths are based on out-of-region results. Navy and South Carolina are playoff contenders themselves, so these are the most important games to date for our team," he said.

We're talking about a team on a roll, and not one match too late, because the Bruins have a little get-together to host this weekend.

After a disastrous 0-3 start, the Bruins are 8-1-1 on the West Coast. In fact, since giving up three goals in one game to Virginia, the defense has allowed only three goals in its next 984 minutes.

Offensively, the Bruins have outscored regional opponents 30-3, with Bill Thompson's 24 points leading the team. Ray Fernandez, an assist-maker supreme of late, has 16 points, while setting up Thompson for four goals.

For Fernandez, Met-Life should bring back fond memories. In the 1986 classic, Fernandez had an assist against New Mexico in a 4-1 win, then followed with the first two goals in a 3-0 triumph over Duke.

Now, though, it's time for the Bruins to leave the sanctuary of the West. With Navy from the Mid-Atlantic, and South Carolina from the Southern, the Bruins will have ample opportunity to draw national attention.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

UCLA midfielder Ray Fernandez.

"It's important for us. We have to demonstrate for the West that our start was not truly reflective of our strength and ability," said head coach Sigi Schmid.

So, Sigi, why have things changed?

"On offense, we have tried to be more direct. We spent too much time going east and west early on," he said.

Thompson is the epitome of that direct approach, for the term "breakaway goal" is the predominate manner of describing his latest scoring streak. And then there's Fabrizio Luppi, who has exhibited the ability to send deep crosses from his wing position of late.

"We've tightened things up on defense," added Schmid. "Anton (Nistl, goalkeeper) has a lot of confidence and has been playing well, and Will Steadman has come into his own at sweeper."

The Bruin back line is also looking for one of its own to return, as Dana Keir has been sidelined with a hamstring injury since the Stanford match two weeks ago.

UCLA SPORTS INFO

South Carolina goalkeeper Charles Arndt.

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

The words "Met-Life Classic" are like music to the ears of South Carolina's soccer squad. The Gamecocks have participated in three previous classics around the country and have won each of them, compiling a 6-0 record in the process.

In 1988, South Carolina has bounced around the national rankings like a soccer ball on Astroturf. A 2-1 win over defending NCAA champion Clemson two weeks ago catapulted the Gamecocks from an unranked position to the No. 5 spot. This week, after defeating Citadel, 1-0, and losing to Duke, 3-1, South Carolina finds itself holding on at the No. 20 position.

It is defense which has sparked the Gamecocks to a 10-3-1 mark this season, for two of the three losses have been 1-0 decisions, while the Duke debacle was the first time all season that goalkeeper Charles Arndt has allowed more than one goal in a match.

Arndt has a 0.50 goals against average with nine shutouts this season, but the credit must be shared with his fullback line. Mike Gosselin, Tommy Loeber, Scott Henderson and David Golan team in front of Arndt to play a finesse-oriented defense.

Up front, South Carolina features two foreign players: Iceland native Jonas Gudjonsson leads the team with 8 goals and 5 assists, while Englishman Grenville Pope is right behind (6g, 7a).

"This mix of foreign and American talent in the tournament we haven't seen since we have had primarily American teams in the past," said Schmid.

A defensive-oriented team often earns many tight decisions, as have the Gamecocks. This fact, coupled with a tradition of excellence (No. 2 final ranking last season), should make South Carolina able to handle the cross-country travel experience.

And, besides, if anything goes awry on the trip over, all Coach Berson has to do is repeat those seemingly magical words, "Met-Life, Met-Life."

Top-ranked UCLA battles Arizona in Tuscon

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

The UCLA Bruins, the nation's latest No. 1 team, head into the desert to face the hungry Arizona Wildcats, the team that knocked off the Bruins the last time they were No. 1, in 1980.

Not officially No. 1, of course, but primed to move into the top spot after top-ranked Alabama lost earlier in the day. The fired up Wildcats beat No. 2 UCLA, 23-17, ending any hopes of a Bruin national title.

The Wildcats will try to play the role of spoiler again this Saturday, as the stage has been set in sold-out Arizona Stadium.

Ronald Veal, the sophomore quarterback who certainly got a trial by fire last year starting for an injured Bobby Watters, will get the call again against the Bruins. Veal is a good runner and has a better arm than the senior Watters, and coach Dick Tomey likes what Veal adds to his "wish 'n' shoot offense."

"Ronald gives us an added dimension at quarterback, in terms of throwing the ball. Ronald really got an education last year, starting as a true freshman. He really matured. He came in last week (against WSU) when we really needed a boost and did a great job for us."

In terms of offense, the Wildcats will go more with the wishbone than their hybrid run 'n' shoot offense.

"It will be important for us to run the ball well if we want to be effective on offense. If we are running well, then that will allow us to start throwing the ball."

Veal ran for four touchdowns and 70 yards and also completed 10-18 for 175 yards.

The Wildcats are ranked 10th nationally rushing, grinding out 274.5 yards per game. However, UCLA is ranked 16th nationally

Farrow, Garrow advance

Top-seeded Buff Farrow advanced in the first round of play at the Volvo Intercollegiate Tennis championships in Athens, Georgia Thursday, as he beat Donni Leaycraft of Louisiana State, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3.

Farrow is the defending NCAA runner-up in singles play and the top returning player in the nation. He will take on on USC's John Carras today in second-round action.

Teammate Brian Garrow had an even easier time, thrashing Minhea Nastase, Ilie's uncle, of Mississippi State, 6-1, 6-2.

Garrow then teamed up with fellow Bruin Pat Gilbreath in the doubles competition and walked over Claes Ramel and Martin Aguirre of Iowa, 6-2, 6-1.

Galbreath and Garrow, the defending NCAA doubles champions, will play Mark Kaplan and Richard Lubner of UC Irvine.

Questions face spikers in Oregon

The next big test for the UCLA women's volleyball team will not be the Oregon Ducks or the Oregon State Beavers, the Bruins' next opponents, as the Bruins have already beaten both teams this season. The big test within these matches will come in the team's ability to play together.

The question the Bruins will have to answer at Eugene tonight and at Corvallis tomorrow is: Have the Bruins entered a mid-season slump?

The last few matches indicate that they have. Except for the USC match, the Bruins have not showed much emotion on the court in recent weeks.

Said UCLA assistant coach Greg Giovanazzi: "We haven't had a real good match in a few weeks. . .I'm concerned about how the players are mentally preparing themselves."

Oregon will be the first opportunity for UCLA to pull itself together. An 8-10 team overall and 2-7 in the Pac-10, Oregon dropped out of the national rankings this week for the first time this season.

Moreover, the 10-15 (0-9 Pac-10) Oregon State Beavers provide no particular challenge for the Bruins.

Individually, the Bruins may be the most talented team in the nation. Junior middle blocker Daiva Tomkus has put in impressive statistics in every match that she has played. Her .413 season hitting percentage is the second in the nation.

Senior setter Ann Boyer has also played well, smoking all other setters in the conference and leading the Bruins to their longest winning streak since 1983.

Water polo demolishes Pepperdine in romp, 17-6

The No. 2-ranked UCLA water polo team looked impressive yesterday, as it pasted No. 9 Pepperdine, 17-6, at Sunset Rec. Eight Bruins participated in the scoring, as the poloists notched their 19th victory of the year. UCLA will travel to Santa Barbara on Sunday to play the seventh-ranked Gauchos (13-4) at noon.

The Bruins got out of the blocks quickly, as they built up a 4-0 lead in the first period. Junior Mark Maretzki scored twice, and seniors Hank Peterson and Jeff Moore both tallied. During the quarter, the UCLA defense, led by senior Fernando Carsalade, forced many Wave turnovers.

In the second, the Bruins continued their relentless surge on the Pepperdine goal, as they stretched their lead to 9-0, with most of the scoring resulting from an impressive UCLA counterattack.

The Waves finally got on the board with just under a minute to play in the half, when Pepperdine's Rob Sutter converted twice during power play situations. Senior Scott Leonard scored twice in the quarter, as did Peterson, who picked up his second and third goals of the contest. Senior Pero Asic also chipped in his fifth goal of the season.

With the score 9-2 at half, the two squads settled for trading goals throughout the third. Carsalade scored twice, while Moore added his second and sophomore Javier Escobar his first. The Waves countered with three goals of their own, including Sutter's third, to make it 13-5 after three.

In the final frame, the Bruins showed no mercy, as they piled on four more goals, with one each by Carsalade, Moore, Leonard and Alex Rousseau. Pepperdine could only manage a single goal in the waning seconds of the game, as UCLA won easily, 17-6.

In defense of the Waves, three of their top players are being redshirted this season in hopes of amassing a dream team next year. They also have only one senior and two juniors on their roster.
